LATEST INTELLIGENCE

By Telegraph to the New-York Daily Times.

From Washington.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, June 26.

WILLIAM BURWELL, of Virginia, will supply the place of Mr. ELLIS, as Editor of the American Organ during the temporary absence of Mr. E. on account of ill health.

The Collector of New-York has been ordered to give a clearance to the KINNEY steamer, provided the law is complied with.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, is represented to be in very bad health from over-exertion in the late campaign.

The Secretary of War has returned.

Great efforts are being made to save Mr. WILSON, Commissioner of the Land Office, from being removed.

Dedication of a Catholic Cathedral.

PROVIDENCE, Monday, June 25.

The ceremonies attending the dedication of St. Paul's Cathedral, were highly imposing, commencing as early as 5 in the morning. Archbishop HUGHES, of New-York, with 14 Bishops, 35 priests, participated in the occasion, and over 5,000 people were present. About 10 o'clock, the doors of the Cathedral were opened, and the procession of bishops, priests and boys, numbering 150, entered and celebrated Pontifical High Mass. The bishops were clothed in magnificent vestments. Archbishop HUGHES was conducted to the pulpit by two of the clergy, and proceeded to speak from Acts, xx. 28. The services occupied the principal part of the day. In the evening, Archbishop KENRICK preached from Matthew, xi. 7,—a sermon descriptive of the virtues of St. John.

There is ten feet and two inches of water in the channel.

Election of Judges.

HARTFORD, Ct., Tuesday, June 26.

The House has just elected on its part four Judges of the Superior Court. Two of the regularly nominated Know-Nothing candidates were defeated, viz.: Ex-Governor DUTTON and CHARLES T. MCCURDY, late Minister to Austria. The successful men were LORIN P. WALDO, Dem., at present Commissioner of Patents; ORRIN S. SEYMOUR, Dem., late member of Congress; THOMAS B. BUTLER, late Member of Congress, and JOHN D. PARK, of Norwich, member of the Legislature. The two last were the Know-Nothing members. The County Court has been abolished.

Cowhidding of Two Citizens of Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, Monday, June 25.

JONATHAN P. BRODERICK and Dr. GRANT, both prominent citizens and very respectably connected, were to-day convicted in the Police Court of abducting and seducing a young girl that had been bound out to a farmer near Oxford, in this State, by the Directors of the House of Refuge. BRODERICK was fined $100 and sentenced to 10 days' imprisonment, and GRANT was fined $150 and 20 days' imprisonment.

A large meeting was held in Fifth-street Market space to-day, for the purpose of making arrangements to celebrate the Fourth of July, without distinction of party, sect or nativity.

Railroad Accident.

MOBILE, Ala., Tuesday, June 26.

The locomotive of the passenger train from Niagara was thrown off the track three miles above Milton yesterday, in consequence of a land slide, and turning over and over an embankment twenty feet, righted itself in the canal. The engineer, fireman, and one passenger, were carried down with the locomotive, but escaped injury. The baggage-car was crushed, and a passenger car injured, but were saved from following the locomotive by the breaking of the coupling.

The Situation of Leavenworth.

NIAGARA, N. Y., Monday, June 25.

LEAVENWORTH, who was wounded in the duel with BRECKENRIDGE, has been removed to this place, and is going on as well as can be expected. There is no present appearance of mortification with wounds, nor any present fear of life or limb. The ball passed close to the femoral artery without wounding it; and fractured the bone of the thigh, which fracture has not yet been reduced.

Case of the British Brig Buffalo.

BOSTON, Tuesday, June 26.

The British brig Buffalo is still detained at Holmes' Hole, under charge of the Revenue Cutter James Campbell, and officers have been despatched by the U. S. Marshal of this city to investigate the complaint of the passengers on board, who allege they have been kidnapped for the war in the Crimea, instead of being as by agreement to work on railroads in Nova Scotia. The investigation may occupy several days.

New Hampshire Legislature.

CONCORD, N. H., Tuesday, June 26.

In the House, to-day, addresses for the removal of JOSHUA ATWOOD, Sheriff of Hillsboro' County, and Adjutant General WEBSTER, were passed by large majorities.

Mr. TAPPAN, of Bradford, gave notice that he should shortly introduce a Personal Liberty Bill.

Lake Navigation.

DUNKIRK, Tuesday, June 26.

The Canada, the first of the Great Western Railway steamers, arrived this morning from Hamilton and Toronto. She was received by a salute of one hundred guns from Fort Ontario, and a like number from the cutter.

Fire at Springfield, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Tuesday, June 26.

A fire broke out at 4 o'clock this morning in the millinery store of A. H. WARE, on Main-street, and consumed the whole of the contents. The building was only partially destroyed.

Court of Appeals.

ALBANY, Tuesday, June 26.

At the evening session of the Court Appeals, Nos. 65 and 75 were struck off. No. 76, judgment reversed by default. No. 3 on argument.

Calendar for 27th—Nos. 12, 14, 19, 22, 35, 57, 63, 64, 66, 67.

Know-Nothing Defeat.

NORFOLK, Monday, June 25.

By the fusion of all parties HUNTER WOODIS, anti-Know-Nothing, was elected Mayor to-day. The rest of the tickets are in doubt.

Seven Prisoners Escaped from Jail.

EASTON, Pa., Tuesday, June 26.

All the prisoners in our jail, seven in number, broke out last night and made good their escape.

☞ The ship D. H. Wagen, from Bremen, with 404 passengers, reports that, on the 19th of June, in lat. 41 20, lon. 62 20, at 50 minutes after noon, she spoke the steamship Emerson, hence for Havre. The Wagen did not see the Washington, and no other steamer but the Emerson was within sight.

THE TURF FOR 1855.

Interesting Trotting Match and Quick Time.

Yesterday afternoon the Union Course, Long Island, was attended by a large concourse of people, to witness the trotting match for $2,000, mile heats and repeat, between the celebrated Northern horses Lady Franklin and Saratoga Belle. The Lady was under the ownership of HIRAM WOODRUFF, and the Belle was driven by DAN PFIFFER. They came upon the track in fine condition. While exercising, the brown mare, Belle of Saratoga, was the favorite, and had the call of $100 to $70, with numerous takers. The match had long been talked about in the sporting world, and was made to come off the 26th of June, 1855, without regard to the weather.

In addition to the wagers made on the result of the race, considerable money changed hands on the time here, which was much faster than the majority of the audience had any idea of at, or previous to their starting. About 4 o'clock the words were announced to be in readiness, and the word was given by the Judges. They had a fine start and kept nearly side by side until approaching the "half-mile pole," when Lady was let out by HIRAM, and she passed there in 1:12, some two lengths in advance of the Belle. The heat was most beautifully contested and much admired by the spectators. It was announced in favor of Lady Franklin in the rapid speed of two minutes and 31½ seconds, which is the best time made in a race of the kind during the present Spring racing on Long Island.

The next heat was won quite handily by Lady Franklin, in "two thirty-three." The Belle, however, made a good show, and trotted in fine style, but did not prove to possess speed enough for her competitor.

The atmosphere during the afternoon was delightful, and the spectators seemed to enjoy the sport with considerable interest.

NEW-YORK CITY.

GERMANS IN AMERICA.

The Pic-Nic of the Saengvereins at Elm Park.

30,000 PEOPLE ASSEMBLED.

We never saw the like before! Such a pouring down of lager-bier, such swarms of Germans, such extravagantly jolly times, we should not have expected to see if we had undertaken a year's travel and tarry in Germany, as we saw yesterday at Elm Park, where the German Singing and Turning Unions had their pic-nic. But to be orderly.

From 8 o'clock until 10, Canal-street was crowded with well-dressed Germans—men, women and children—proceeding in one continuous stream to take their passage for Elm Park either by steamboat or rail. Along the Bowery, in the Park and on Broadway, large numbers of our fellow-citizens were assembled to see the procession pass on its way to the steamer—which it did about 10 o'clock, in the following order:

Band.
Castine Rangers, Capt. Buchtel.
Band.
New-York Riflemen, Company 1, Capt. Johnson.
The German Turners.
Band.
German Musical Societies.
Delegates from other cities, preceded by the American and German National flags.
Band.
German Singers.
New-York Hussars, Capt. Beiman.
Band.
Westchester Artillery, Capt. Schmitt.

Although the procession was a very large one, numbering probably some five or six thousand, yet quiet and order reigned throughout, and we have seldom seen a procession move along Broadway so rapidly and easily as did the one of yesterday.

We were drifting along Greenwich-street looking for an item, yesterday noon. On nearing Canal-street we found we were preceded and succeeded, surrounded, encompassed and encircled with German women in holiday attire, German men, washed up and rigged out as they are wont to be when they make their Sunday excursions, and German babies as happy as "going dada" and a stick of candy each would make them. We made no resistance to the tide, and by purchasing, for sixpence, a ticket at the end of the wharf, found no bar to our admittance on board the Columbus, bound instantly to Stryker's Bay, the foot of Eighty-fifth-street, a few rods from which landing Elm Park is located.

The little steamer snorted and puffed, and blew off steam like any other Yankee steamer. But that was all that was not Dutch—or German; its all the same, or pretty much so—about it. Nobody talked English. Almost all shook their heads if we asked an English question. When the babies cried for drink—and they cried only in Dutch—their fathers brought Dutch water or lager bier to alleviate their thirst. Dutch faces they all had, and the well-known Dutch characteristics. So utterly Dutchy was it all that, in spite of our Yankee schooling and American bringing up, before we landed at Stryker's Bay we found ourselves stuttering the Dutch lingo, and rounding up pure English words at either end just as the newly arrived do when they try to talk soberly in our tongue.

The walk from the landing to the Park was a pleasant one. The clouds still obscured the sun, but not a drop of rain fell. Yet from the showers of Monday the ground was still damp, and we judge that some very early regretted that they had not worn something thicker soled than their thin light gaiters. There were three entrances to the Park, at each of which were constantly pressing in a dense throng of people. Those who were long detained paused and refreshed at some of the scores of stalls where lager bier, Bologna sausages, or even oysters were to be had for one's money.

Entering at last, our ticket was exchanged for a yellow ribbon, wherewith we at once adorned the left lappel of our coat, and it was a gratification to know that whatever male upon the premises did not wear a counterpart of that yellow ribbon, was summarily to be seized and ejected. The yellow ribbon read as follows:

FICNIC; SECRETES
ALLGEMEINES SANGERFEST,
NEW-YORK, 1855.

But within, none can conceive what jolly times prevailed who did not see it. The large area was full of people; there must have been 30,000 people there first and last. Carriages drove on to the grounds,—in some cases they were used as tables and seats—the horses being turned loose or hitched under the shadow of some tree. The music was furnished very much at random—at three or four different points at the same time—and seldom entirely intermitted. The Brass Bands, of which several were on the ground, often set in to relieve them,—it was like meeting a man from Connecticut on the banks of the Rhine, when once, as by accident, the Washington Band played The Star Spangled Banner.

One of the first objects that attracted our attention, on getting well into the Park, was a large banner, with a single verse in German inscribed upon it, welcoming the strangers from the other parts of the Union to the Empire City of New-York. Announcements too of Caviar, Ancheovis and Heringe Salat—those favorite dishes of the Germans in their distant Faderland—were nailed fast to several of the trees, while dispersed through the Park there were some thirty bars of all sizes, where "Lager" was dispensed to the thirsty, in exchange for tickets—four to the quarter. Before 4 o'clock from twelve to fourteen thousand persons were already busily enjoying themselves, and still for a couple of hours longer they kept streaming in at both entrances, few leaving the ground until nearly 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Here under the trees some one of the Saengvereins sang a love ditty, student or drinking song, to tunes which were familiar to the most of those present long before they left Germany. In this respect possibly yesterday's Pic-Nic proved more really enjoyable than the previous evening's concert. Then again another Verein would join in a chorus, or sing some Volkslied that warmed the very heart's blood of their German friends—while everywhere might be seen merry troops of Turners either showing off their athletic skill or executing des Franklin through the crowd to test or bar. All indeed seemed to think with good old MARTIN LUTHER, that

"Who loves not woman, wine and song,
Will be a fool his whole life long."

Here and there were scattered parties of our more elderly German citizens, gravely drinking their Mai wein, and telling either of their own singing or the athletic feats they did, years ago, in some far-off village in their native land; while every now and then some favorite opera air or thrilling march would burst through the greenwood from one or other of the bands.

Add together a score of Camp-meetings, subtracting all of the religious element, and one may faintly imagine the scene. It was unlike any common pic-nic got up by our folks, in many points. Our tables on festival occasions are dress with flowers, and cover with delicacies. There were no flowers to be seen at this German Festival, and delicacies, as we deem them, would have been laughed at. But the tables groaned with cold meats and roast meats, sausages, rye bread, cakes of most uncouth shapes and strange construction, and the inevitable lager bier keg. That keg was all-prevailing. It stood on end on every table. It was lashed into the branches of the trees; it was tipped up at the crotch of every two uncovered seats. There were private kegs and public kegs—kegs out of which a ticket would buy a drink—others out of which a sixpence alone would suffice, and others whence no money would have tempted a drop but for Gland-ship's sake. It was freer than Croton. In a remote corner of the ground the sign "Temperenz Hotel," (only done into German words and in German letters,) excited our curiosity. We could not discover what it meant by the "Temperenz," however, for the keg was there running at every where else. At first all were content to drink from glasses, but as the day wore on, the great wooden goblets were plenty that would hold a gallon—turned at the lip and at the stem, but elsewise left with the bark on; and as the singers drank from them the foaming beer streamed down on either side, making one think of the pictures of the old drinkers, when young Bacchus was in the flesh. Others filled great beakers of silver—which, if they were true silver, would have made silver coin enough to serve one with change for a lifetime. Others filled, and almost as quickly emptied, long drinking horns—two feet—three feet long—whose tips were rimmed with silver, or even with gold. These were passed from mouth to mouth—the young girls not declining to share it—and it was sport to see how the last one after giving the wrong turn to the horn caught the relics of the drink in his bosom instead of his mouth. We have come to the conclusion that lager bier, however much it may jollify or stupefy, won't make men drunk—else Elm Park would have held a drunken gang yesterday—while truth to tell, no man reeled or staggered or looked more than terribly stretched, and still expansive at the end of the day.

We should expect American babies to die off by hundreds if they, instead of German babies, had been the subjects of the treatment afforded to babydom at Elm Park. When they fell asleep the mothers spread a handkerchief on the wet ground, and laid the little innocents down. When they woke they nursed them and then laid them down again. And so many babies together we have never seen before. BARNUM's gathering was a select little tea-party in comparison. We were four hours on the ground and met but one whose tongue spoke English naturally—nor met an American face until as we were going out, Mayor WOOD's carriage was observed packed in at the entrance, where a long line preceded it, waiting for the yellow ribbons to be furnished. His Honor's coming had been awaited with great eagerness, and our Reporter says that when he did make his appearance the enthusiasm gushed out like lager bier.

As we left the ground it occurred to us that all of New-York that claimed to be of German extract must have been upon the ground. We thought that a sleepy Policeman with a squad of small boys and a pack of fire-crackers, would be able to storm and take all that remained of them. To satisfy a curiosity on this point, we returned by way of Avenue A, and paused to reconnoitre affairs in the Seventeenth Ward. But not a bit thinned out was that modern Germany. There was a square German face to every pane of glass, as usual, a German woman sunning herself on every threshold, and the sidewalks as thickly crowded as ever. From which we concluded that if the new Census tells us anything like the truth, we shall be "make wide eyes" when we come to see by it what multitudes from Germany are in our midst.

The Saengvereins.

The arrangements for speaking were so badly ordered that scarcely any one knew where and when the speeches would be delivered. We were only able to hear the speech of Dr. FORNACH, which though somewhat short was certainly to the point. He spoke principally of what he called the mission of the Germans, and declared that a love of songs was always an indication of an educated mind. Song alone, he said, speaks to the heart; and because the heart is the home of the Germans, the German naturally likes to dwell in his own home. He has much to struggle with in America, he encounters animosities in nearly every quarter, but nevertheless, the German endeavors to maintain his character, and he does so in a land where loafers are made use of to form parties, and in such a land the German can truly be said not to be in his own sphere. Our German cultivation alone remains for us, and much has been done during the last few years to raise the character of the Germans, and future years will and shall [cheers,] accomplish more. He ended by exclaiming, Vive German cultivation, German friendliness, German education, and German song.

His address was received with great applause throughout. Three or four other gentlemen spoke, but the crowd was so great immediately in front of the small platform, that we were only able to catch a word or two here and there. One fact alone we noticed, that when Mr. LINDENMULLER endeavored to touch upon political questions, he no longer met with approbation at the hands of his audience. Mr. LEXOW, the President of the New-York Saengvereins, also made a short speech, but in so low a tone, owing to his severe accident, that we are sure very few could have heard him.

The Policemen's Back Pay—Over One Hundred Law Suits Commenced.

The test case of Captain GEORGE W. WALLING, of the Eighteenth Ward Police, against the Corporation of the City of New-York, relative to the "back pay" that the Comptroller was ordered to pay some two years ago, was brought to a conclusion yesterday. It seems the matter was carried through the various Courts by HENRY L. CLINTON, Esq., for the Plaintiff, who was fought every inch of the way by the City's Counsel. Mr. CLINTON was successful in every Court. Corporation Counsel DILLON was preparing to carry the case to the Court of Appeals, but was checked in that proceeding by a resolution of the Common Council. The Comptroller having now paid up Captain WALLING's claim, over one hundred officers to whom "back pay" is due, have since placed their claims in the hands of Mr. CLINTON, to commence suits against the City, if they refuse to "step up to the Captain's office and settle."

NEW-YORK UNIVERSITY.

Rev. Dr. Matthews' Address before the Alumni.

The twenty-third anniversary of the Association of the Alumni of the New-York University took place last (Tuesday) night in the University Chapel, before a brilliant audience.

Mr. GEO. H. MOORE, the President, announced that the exercises of the anniversary would be introduced by a prayer from Rev. Dr. HENRY.

The reverend gentleman designated offered an appropriate and touching prayer, after which.

The President announced that the annual meeting of the Alumni would be held to-day (Wednesday,) in the small chapel, and stated that they were invited to meet the officers and students of the University, at the Commencement to-day.

Rev. Dr. MATTHEWS, first Chancellor of the University, and one of its founders, was introduced by the President, amid loud applause. He had been asked, he said, in the polite note which had been addressed to him, to dwell on what the University owed to the City and to the State. They had also alluded to the fact of his having been the first who held the office of Chancellor, as furnishing him every advantage to speak on the subject. Having thus marked out the course they wished him to pursue, he would endeavor to comply with their request. In referring to the early movements for establishing this seat of learning, he seemed to be treading among fresh graves, that should be held in deep reverence.

Although it was scarcely twenty-five years since the first meetings on the subject were held yet the majority of those who then took an active part in that enterprise were no longer among the living. There was ALBERT GALLATIN, the Diplomatist and Statesman; MORGAN LEWIS, Chief Justice of the State, and subsequently its Governor; and JAMES TALLMADGE, who spent many of his years in the Councils, both of the State and of the Nation, who were all gone. Of our merchant princes they had such men as JOHN JOHNSON, HENRY A. WYCKOFF, SAMUEL ALSOP and JOHN DELAFIELD, who were also numbered with the dead. Of his own profession, Dr. MCMURRAY and Dr. MILNOR, he had seen both laid in the grave.

But there was another name to be mentioned, that of Bishop WAINWRIGHT, to whom he, (the Rev. orator,) if he was entitled to the credit which had been assigned him of having devised and matured the enlarged scheme of instruction it was designed to embrace, was indebted for most valuable aid. It was with no ordinary emotion that he looked back to the days in which they took sweet counsel together, in drawing out the plan and moulding the features of the University of New-York. Delicacy forbade him to particularize the few who survived, and who had also a prominent hand in creating the institution. They were not any of them men who were to be contented with anything much, nor who would devise anything visionary. They were men who not only could comprehend what the interests of learning required, but who understood the spirit—the great public heart of our City.

Their design was to create a University not merely in name but in reality and truth. One adapted to the wants of the whole nation. Nor was it to be a University cast after the model of Universities abroad, which, however available for age, are defaced with the worst of indolence and [illegible] and hundered by usages that are antiquated and worse than useless. On referring to the programme, it would be seen that it was to be a University adapted to the age of activity in which we live,—to the untrammeled thought and lofty purposes of the age to which we belong.

The eloquent speaker referred in detail to the various branches of study embraced in the University's course of instruction, and proceeded to observe that it was true that the incorporation of such various branches of learning in the scheme of the University rendered the scope of the institution exceedingly comprehensive, if not vast; and as there are men to be found everywhere who are croakers by profession, they were met by those who pronounced the whole design Utopian, impracticable, and, even if practicable, disorganizing and revolutionary. But so the Apostles, who first preached our holy religion were denounced as "men who turned the world upside down," and if they did so it was the very thing they ought to have done, seeing they found the world wrong side up.

COLUMBUS, too, with his great project of the discovery of America, was accounted a mere schemer by the monks of Salamanca, because they were well enough satisfied with things as they were. But whatever might be said of those who had no faith in the projected University, the enterprise was in the hands of those who, having put their hands to the plow, did not know how to look back. They unfurled their flag to the breeze, and in spite of every obstacle, achieved their great design. Progress was the word of our age, as it had been of every age that promised good for the future. It was our privilege to live at a period when many of the grievous enormities that had heretofore oppressed humanity, whether civil, religious or literary, were shaking and tottering towards their fall. Indeed, not a few of them had fallen already.

The hollow deceit which had so long held the world in spiritual bondage, and the abuses in the shrines of learning in the Old World, were made subject to this spirit of scrutiny, which goes on weighing everything before it in the balances of truth and right. The loud and earnest cry of BACON, when he asked "Is knowledge ever barren?" was beginning to be heard far and near, among the high and the low; and in no land on which the sun shines was this cry so earnest, so loud and so prolonged as in our own. That land had announced her lofty purpose to create a new era in the history of the human race; new, not only in politics, in morals and in social economy, but new in the cultivation of science by scientific men, and in its application to purposes of practical good. See what one of her sons had done with the electric fluid; and what was true of that might be true also concerning the other powers of nature, our knowledge of which was as yet, notwithstanding all that had been discovered, but a knowledge on the surface. Fire might yet be extracted from the mountain of ice, and the frozen mass thus made to liquify itself. The very Upas tree might yet be made to furnish an antidote to its own deadly poison; and the noxious vapors now ascending from the putrid marsh might yet be turned into a channel that would compel them to minister to the health and life that they were now so powerful to destroy. Hence the nation required institutions embracing a sphere of instruction leaving no one branch of science or of letters to stand alone; and where could she plant such a seat with as much advantage to all as in the City of New-York?

In all the qualifications requisite for this, New-York outstripped all other cities in the Western World, and was every year leaving them more and more in the distance. The nation called loudly and imperatively for such a seat of learning, and she would have it. If not here, she would have it elsewhere. To which of the alternatives his preferences inclined, it was easy to perceive. But the work, he repeated, must be done, and whoever done he would rejoice to see it. Public good must always be the first object of the man who would be entitled to public confidence.—"Amicus Socrates, amicus Plato, sed major amicus Veritas."

The reverend and eloquent gentleman concluded amid loud applause.

The thanks of the Alumni were then voted to him unanimously, and the meeting dispersed.

Wreck of the Challenge.

The schooner Challenge of Plymouth, Mass., was wrecked on the 13th, in lat. 37, lon. 68, during a squall. After remaining ten days on the wreck, the Captain and most of the crew succeeded in boarding the Chili, in which they arrived at this port yesterday. The steward was left on the wreck in a dying condition.

EDUCATIONAL.

First Ward School Examination.

Among the many pleasant and interesting reunions which are ever occurring in our City, none are of more interest to those who have time to devote to them than the Examinations, Concerts, Exhibitions and Visitors' Days in the large Public Schools connected with our great system of Education, as will be seen by the following account of the First Ward School Examination had on Tuesday last.

The large School in Greenwich-street, rear of Trinity Church, passed its second regular Annual Examination, since the adoption of the existing system, on Tuesday last, under the immediate direction of the Visiting Committee, consisting of Messrs. B. F. WEYBOUTS, A. J. PERRY and J. M. ANDREWS. Superintendents RANDALL and MCKEEN were present and participated in the exercises. The Examination commenced at 9 o'clock A. M. in the Primary School, consisting of two Departments, under the direction of Miss MARIAN BLAIR, Principal, and Miss S. C. HUBBIS, Vice-Principal, aided by thirteen Assistant Teachers. The attendance was 767 girls and boys. Several of the classes were examined by the teachers in reading, singing, and other exercises, with very satisfactory results. The order, attention, cleanliness, and general appearance of the School were such, in all respects, as to elicit warm commendation from the Officers and Superintendents, in which the large number of visitors heartily joined. Brief and pertinent addresses were made by Mr. PERRY, Alderman DELAMATER of the Sixteenth Ward, and Mr. RANDALL, City Superintendent. The number of promotions from this School to the Girls' and Boys' Grammar School were 24 of the former and 26 of the latter. The teachers in this School have been selected with much care, and will compare favorably with any similar corps in the City. Their names are: Marian Blair, Sarah C. Hubbis, S. Louisa Peers, Josephine Hunn, Amanda M. Huthwaite, Maria G. Martin, Elizabeth W. Carman, Amy B. Butts, Mary A. Colmier, Caroline Probst, Ellen Comstock, Ann Dearden, Annie E. Van Boskerck, and Emily B. Simmons.

THE BOYS' GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

Mr. L. W. ARMAN, Principal, THOMAS FANNING, Jr., Vice-Principal, EDWARD SCHWACOFER, JAMES B. TELLNOR, JOSEPHINE MORRISON, and ELIZABETH WILSON, Assistants, with an attendance of 222 Boys, next received the attention of the examiners. The Pupils with their Teachers were assembled in the main room, which will accommodate about 300, and all the available space was filled by visitors, parents, and friends of the School. The exercises consisted of Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Geography, Spelling, Speaking by Masters JOHN LOCKE and LOUIS BRIANA, enlivened with Singing of much merit. There were several very creditable specimens of Writing and Book-Keeping on the tables, to the latter of which special attention is paid by the Principal, Mr. ARMAN. The want of a good Plane in this School is felt to be a serious draw-back upon the advancement of the School, and it is to be hoped the very efficient local Board will devise some means of procuring one at an early day. Addresses highly commendatory of the improved condition of the School, the faithfulness of the Teachers, and the punctuality of the Pupils generally, were made by several of the examiners, after which the School was dismissed with a parting ode sung by the whole School.

THE GIRLS' GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

The examiners, with a largely increased attendance of visitors, adjourned at 12 o'clock to the main room of the Girls' Grammar School, where Misses HARRIET A. C. HUTHWAITE, Principal; ELLEN A. PRESWICK, Vice Principal; ELLEN M. HAYNEY, SARAH L. BLACKMAN and C. ANNA ALLEN, Assistants, with an attendance of 166 scholars, awaited them in the most perfect order, nearly all dressed in white, and many of the desks being adorned with flowers, which filled the room with their fragrance. The exercises commenced with a choral hymn, sung by the pupils, accompanied by their Principal on the piano, after which four classes were examined very thoroughly in reading, grammar, geography, spelling and definitions. Some excellent instrumental music and singing, by the pupils and teachers, enlivened the exercises. The school never appeared to so much advantage, and was commended in very strong terms by the numerous school officers of the various Wards, who were present during the prolonged and highly interesting examination. Among the distinguished visitors we noticed the venerable GEO. T. TRIMBLE, so well known as the President of the late Public School Society, and in connection with many of the great benevolent enterprises and institutions in our City, who came in with the President of the Board of Education, Wm. H. NEILSON, Esq.; also Judge NELSON J. WATERBURY, Alderman BROWN, Hon. Mr. O'KEEFE, and His Honor Mayor WOOD, who delivered a very telling and effective off-hand address, which was listened to with close attention; during which he alluded to the advantages derived by the pupils from our free system of public instruction, contrasting them with the scant opportunities afforded but a single generation back. At the close of the Mayor's Address, the highest class was tested in reading, with a view to awarding some elegant book-prizes, the gifts of the teachers and school officers. After several trials, in which most of the young ladies acquitted themselves so uniformly well, the following named were adjudged to receive the prizes—six in number: SARAH COHEN, for best reading, which was of remarkable excellence, the first prize—a large illustrated work, presented by the Principal. Miss MARY SCOTT received the second prize; MARY J. SAWYER the third; JANE HIGGINS the fourth; ANNIE KEELER the fifth; and CAROLINE KEELER the sixth; and all were marked for general deportment and scholarship. The prizes were presented by Mr. RANDALL, with some very happy remarks. Certificates of punctuality and good conduct during the past year were presented to thirteen young ladies, after which addresses were made by Messrs. DELAMATER, NEILSON, PERRY, and O'KEEFE. Book prizes were presented by the officers in the Boys' Grammar School to Masters JOHN LOCKE, MORGAN BOYD, JOHN VINCENT, WILLIAM D. BERRYMAN, WILLIAM E. COOPER, FREDERICK LAMBLIN, and RICHARD H. COLTMAN, for good conduct and scholarship. Master JOHN LOCKE is the son of the great humorist, RICHARD ADAMS LOCKE, whom we noticed with his lady among the visitors. Young LOCKE is preparing for the Free Academy, and is a promising chip of the old block, if we read the stars correctly, to say nothing of the moon. In the Primary School, books were presented to Master PATRICK LYNCH, BRIDGET KENNEDY, PATRICK MCFARLAN, HANNAH DOYLE, ALBERT ELLS and CHRISTIAN PETERSON. The large and unusual attendance of parents and school officers, (every member of the local Board being present, with the single exception of Mr. Commissioner TOWNSEND,) together with the numerous distinguished official personages of the City Government, and school officers from other Wards, affords conclusive evidence of the faithfulness of Teachers, Visiting Committee, and all who have the interests of Education in charge. The attention, also which has recently been attracted to the school by the DAILY TIMES, may be considered as having essentially aided to bring about this very desirable result. It is the intention of Miss HUTHWAITE to introduce the system of Monthly Visitors' days, after the manner of the Sixteenth Wards Schools, on account of which recently appeared in the TIMES, and which was warmly urged upon the attention of the School Officers by Mr. DELAMATER, in the course of his remarks. We have no doubt this will prove highly advantageous to the pupils and all concerned.

KANSAS AND MISSOURI.

Mr. Stanton's Twelfth Lecture.

Rev. Mr. STEARNS delivered the Third of his Lectures on Kansas and Missouri, to rather a small audience, last evening, in the Tabernacle. At 8 o'clock, Mr. STEARNS introduced

Mr. WM. J. PATTERSON, junior editor and part-owner of the Parkville Luminary, which was recently thrown into the Missouri River, who addressed the audience about an hour. He commenced by saying that the question which seemed destined to remain permanently before the American people was one which had been compromised time and again, but those compromises seemed to have been transitory.

There were other questions, however, overlying that surface question which had arisen in consequence of defiance of law and the violation of the rights of citizenship by the citizens of Missouri, which, he was very more earnest in their immediate settlement. He wished he were qualified to present them in such a way as not only to awaken the wonted sympathies of his audience, but to arouse them into active exertions to prevent their dearest rights—freedom of thought, freedom of speech, the purity of the ballot-box, the freedom of the press, all the blessings of liberty that had been secured to us through the agency of our revolutionary sires—from being wrested from them by ballots and editorial politicians. Had all recent events in the reign of Richard III, where on account thus this had been made, it would have startled and met the indignation of every lover of freedom. Yet such an attempt had been made and carried out, in a manner of which the opposer was not aware, and his all was actually taken from him, and he was left to the kindness of private friends. All this for the contemptible reason that he was an Abolitionist or Free-Soiler, while in reality it was immaterial he would not say, in company with his co-editor and co-partner, that DAVID R. ATCHISON and his friends had had a right to go into Kansas; and dared to give utterance to his own convictions. Some intimate had been insinuated in reference to these outrages, that having been committed a southern, he was here to call attention to them.

A year or two ago, when the Nebraska bill was on the carpet, and Mr. ATCHISON returned to Missouri from Washington, he found it necessary to do something to counteract the efforts of Mr. BENTON. "Old Bullion" had been trying to show that there was the treaty therein upon which Freedom had a prescriptive, that the soil was free, and that the inhabitants of the whole country demanded its continuance by treaty. It was true, Mr. ATCHISON declared, that the treaty rather was the new Territory shall come into the Union as a free State. What, then, was the power, the necessary, to induce by a vote, and the question was why would Benton. ATCHISON had gone the answer in a drunken frolic after his return to Missouri; it was done through his influence, and he was upon Mr. DOUGLAS. The statement of facts was published in his (the speaker's) paper, and he did not hesitate at the motive with which he had been glad by ATCHISON and his party, although he had not attempted to deny the statement. But he would prove great sympathy with those who had suffered to all, and great of the friends who had turned against the Territory to carry the elections. Then it was they committed the first violation of the Nebraska bill; and then it was they tried to impress upon the public mind that Kansas was a Slave State.

He might tell how a gentleman was employed to write driveling verse at a meeting at which it was resolved to go into Kansas and violate the purity of the ballot-box; he might tell many other similar acts which had come under his own observation, but time would fail him. After giving a constant summary of the Parkville riot, together with his own connection with it, illustrating the democratic spirit which prevailed at the time, he concluded with the sentiment, "No more Slavery north of the South pole."

Mr. STARR then came forward, and after apologizing for taking part in matters so decidedly political in their tendency, commenced by stating that it was his duty to say that if I became Ministers of the Gospel to look after the lost souls of their flock, particularly, he was in no religious. He went to Missouri in search of the Gospel, but did not expect to agitate the question of Slavery, and he never had preached a sermon upon the subject. He had lived with slaveholders, and had had the misfortune to be called an Abolitionist in that country. He would define his position, by saying that he had done all in his power to bring about the emancipation of slaves, and the placing them in a country where they might be what God intended them to be. He had been a witness to many scenes of horror in the South, perpetrated, but upon slaves merely, but upon white men, and for reasons which, in any enlightened country, would be condemned.

Such was the persecution of persons supposed to be tinctured with Abolition or Free-Soil sentiments, that it was not safe for a man to avow them in Missouri. He had himself been assaulted on Sabbath by citizens of the town in which he resided, who had come out for the purpose of proving him to be the devil. But he had met them in their own meeting—and, by a little firmness and presence of mind, had silenced them. Testimonials that, of their own desire, the very gentlemen who had instituted the charges presented, resolutions entirely absolving him from anything wrong.

He told them a story that was the subject matter on stock. If he should give $1,500 begin it to put on had an negro man, or boy, he would, the man would steal the negro or a substitute, he said, there was the worse than a negro thief. In the Independence, that most ordinarily had he was not an Abolitionist, but to say man who had said he was, he would say, making use of a Western phrase, he was a liar. The further proceedings of this meeting were described by the lecturer in a very graphic manner, giving abstracts of the speeches made by Mr. STRINGFELLOW and others.

Mr. STRINGFELLOW said he was whom of the North who worked were men of low character, and all the Northern men were slaves. These statements had been scattered throughout the Southern States, in pamphlets and speeches. This shows in what estimation the men of the North were held. The Appointees to which he had referred was finally broken up, and another was formed of a secret character; and one of its provisions was, that every member should obey implicitly whatever should be ordered or directed by the leader. Many men refused to join this—men who were slaveholders, too. In this manner it was attempted to carry out their nefarious designs.

The lecturer here referred to the large map, before referred to, and pointed out particularly the portions of Missouri which were the most productive. The men who came and settled in Kansas would be on the line of the Great Railway line to the Pacific. However divergent the projected lines might be, they would finally be united to run through Kansas. The lecturer enlarged upon the probable line of the Pacific route, showing very conclusively that it must pass through Kansas. The Missouri Compromise was then referred to, and, by means of the map, the portions of the country devoted to freedom were pointed out.

The curses of Slavery lay in the tendency in the human heart to despotism and avarice. The condition of Slavery did not originate in the fact that men at the North did not sometimes wish that the institution of it. When we talk of the Constitution of the United States, we should not be biased by disturbance which had been brought. The evident spirit of the Constitution and of its framers was opposed to Slavery; and the man who framed it hoped Slavery would speedily end.

When they first legislated in regard to the land of the United States, it was devoted eternally to freedom, and considering that at that time every State in the Union possessed slaves, it was the best argument in favor of the Constitution. [Applause.] When the question arose as to what should be done with the Territories, the North repudiated Slavery, and the South said she would dissolve.

When HENRY CLAY came forward with the compromise he committed a great mistake. All compromises on moral questions were nothing but a virtual coming up and shaking hands with the devil. [Applause.] The Missouri Compromise was a bargain by which the free States were to buy free territory by giving in exchange Slave territory. Men have no right to buy money—to give away territory—to a right and, but not to do wrong. No man had a right to do wrong any where.

The contract, which was an unrighteous one, had been violated by the Pro-Slavery party, and a portion of the new existing State of Missouri was in reality a part of Kansas; and in order to carry out the objectionable of that Compromise it would be necessary to liberate five thousand slaves, now held on territory which was dedicated entirely to freedom. The most terrible idea which a Southern slaveholder could conceive was that there could be no further extension of Slave territory.

When the Compromise was effected, the price of slaves went up 20 per cent. The lecturer illustrated the principle of settling moral questions by majorities, and characterized it as damnable in the extreme. He asked where was a spot in the United States that the South had not covered. The men at the South were smarter and sharper than those at the North. They were always pointing in one direction, in order to cover their notorious proceedings in another. The tricks which had been played in a territorial time were to be characterized by no complimentary terms.

The proceeding of the Parkville riot was another instance of the villainy of the Pro-Slavery spirit. The telegraph offices throughout the State of Missouri were crowded with men who, as the news of the demolition of the press reached them, threw up their hats and hurrahed. The speaker adver

POLITICAL REVIEW.

The Conspiracy against John Quincy Adams in 1828—The Calhoun Rule.

The chief of Revolutionary Presidents ran out with the second term of JAMES MONROE. They directed the administration of the Federal Government from the establishment of the Constitution in 1789 to the 4th of March, 1829. The last of their number was succeeded by one of the most distinguished of the second generation of American statesmen; a man as pure and unselfish in his patriotism as he was upright and faithful in the performance of every public duty. He adopted the policy of his predecessors as the rule of his administrative conduct. The line of principle and of practice which made WASHINGTON first in peace, as he was first in war; which gave MADISON success through a period of great financial trouble at home, and of bloody conflict with a powerful enemy abroad, and which made the public term of MONROE as peaceful and popular as it was eminently useful, was in no wise departed from. Firmness, blended with moderation, and economy in office, conjoined with a liberal encouragement of Home Industry among the People, marked his Administration, and JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, with HENRY CLAY in his Secretary of State, left the Government on the 4th of March, 1829, as he had received it from the last of the Presidents of '76, uncorrupted by extravagance, unmarked by violence, and untainted by proscription, and the Monroe doctrine and pirates principle of "the globe." Our National Destiny appears to have fixed this period as the end of the pure Constitutional rule of Administration, which the illustrious framers of the Government, just forty years before, had contemplated, and which five of their number had successively carried out. The decadence of Revolutionary example began with the inauguration of President JACKSON. It was a foregone conclusion that it should be departed from. The defeat and ostracism of one of the wisest and best men this country had ever called into eminent public service, depended upon a radical change of Administrative policy. It was also entirely necessary that it should become essentially and thoroughly partisan. A system of rewards and punishments was required to be held out in advance to accomplish the end of Mr. ADAMS' defeat for re-election. The original JACKSON leaders, from Maine to Louisiana, understood this, and were prompt to make it known to their subalterns of every degree. The eleventh hour men were tempted by the hopes of rapid promotion for services on the hustings, to abandon an administration which they had cause to know would recognize no other claim to office than fitness for the stations made vacant by the ordinary casualties of death or resignation. The system was introduced, and with fearful and summary rapidity on the incoming of the new President. To what results it led—how it soon accumulated and concentrated power, and its dispensation in the hands of one man, and with what certainty the bad precedent was followed by the successors of General JACKSON, the present generation need scarcely be reminded. But it might be interesting,—possibly useful, even at this day,—to inquire, Who did this thing? Who, besides General JACKSON, contributed to the defeat of JOHN QUINCY ADAMS and the overthrow of the Conservative and Constitutional rule of Administration, delivered to him by MONROE, and which he so wisely and strictly observed through his four years' of Executive service? In other words, who were the men that effected this most unfortunate civil revolution in the practice of the Federal Government?

The inquiry is not, in the present paper, entirely volunteered. It has been suggested by the history of the times, to which we have made reference, as written or dictated by the men themselves. Mr. BENTON was one of the prominent actors in the scene. Mr. CALHOUN another. The first has recently given to the world the record of his Thirty Years in the Senate. The last, though now in his grave, has left an intimate and trusted friend, whose unpublished volume of "Incidents" in the life of his great patron, is now finding its way to the country, piecemeal, through the daily press. These two distinguished men, though coalescing in 1828 in the common purpose to overthrow an Administration, which another of their compeers in the work had created, must be put down, [illegible] as the people at the right [illegible] antipodes. [illegible] had scarcely [illegible] against explosion, [illegible] that Mr. CALHOUN was inimical to the Chief of the Administration, and had played him false in Mr. MONROE's Cabinet on the Florida charges, took place. This separated BENTON and CALHOUN, and from that day to the present, the Missouri Senator has pursued the great Carolinian with steady hostility. Even the grave was not permitted to cover the errors of his political life, or efface the recollection of his alleged infidelity to General JACKSON. Both find a large record in the first volume of the Thirty Years in the Senate. The ancient maxim Nil mortuus nisi bonum, was no bar to the indulgence of his bitterness, while the unfairness of its statements have elicited repeated comments from Mr. CALHOUN's Southern friends. The best of these notices are the extracts from the unpublished book of recollections, by RICHARD K. CRALLE.

There is much, we repeat, in both these books to challenge inquiry into the character and motives of the men who overturned the Administration of JOHN QUINCY ADAMS. They were not bad men all, though if we are to believe what they now tell of each other, we should incline to question the propriety of this qualification as applied to the more prominent actors. Undoubtedly many—we might, with all truth, say most—of them were not the equals in statesmanship or in the integrity of their public conduct to the President and his Secretary of State, who were made the special object of their pursuit and hostility. The distinguished trio in this conspiracy, were JACKSON, VAN BUREN and CALHOUN. BENTON was then one of the lesser lights of the party. Boisterous and verbose in the Senate, he had not then won the first place in their confidence or respect. It was not until his pertinacity had carried through his Expunging Resolutions, at the close of JACKSON's second term, that his weight or influence in the Senate was fully acknowledged, nor was it until his natural arrogance, increased by this achievement, had given place to the more discretion of his later years in the Senate, that the country could be brought to acknowledge his importance in that august body. There were many other men that occupied the second place of influence in the canvass of 1828, who will not, perhaps, be altogether forgotten in the history of the time, when posterity comes to judge its events impartially. Some of these, the warm adherents of Mr. CALHOUN, and his State Rights theory—such as TAZEWELL and TYLER, of Virginia, BERRIEN, of Georgia, HAYNE, of Pennsylvania and McDUFFIE, of South-Carolina, left the JACKSON party with Mr. C. after the Cabinet broke up in 1831. Mr. CRALLE tells us that every one suspected of friendship to Mr. C. was ostracised then, as they had, in a measure, been previously. Other prominent men, like BELL and WHITE, of Tennessee, were driven into the Whig ranks by subsequent events in the JACKSON Administration. Their fate was foretold with almost prophetic certainty, by EDWARD EVERETT, in the House of Representatives, as early, as 1829-'30. Replying to a speech of Mr. BELL, he reminded him that in pursuing the Administration of Mr. ADAMS and Mr. CLAY to the death, he had, perhaps, taught bloody instructions to his party, to return, at some future day, to plague the inventor. And so it turned out. The chalice was indeed commended to the own lips of the Tennessee chieftain. No man who left the JACKSON party was ever hunted with such bitter malignity. The party press, whom he and others had set upon the illustrious ADAMS, like the hounds of Acteon, turned to rend their own masters.

The respective parts played by JACKSON and VAN BUREN, both in the canvass of 1828, and the breach with CALHOUN and his friends in 1831, were long misinterpreted by the country. Mr. VAN BUREN was believed to be the TALLEYRAND, or "little magician," of the play. He it was who had the credit of installing the famous kitchen cabinet of KENDALL and BLAIR, and of pulling the wires to CALHOUN's destruction. But his cunning was overrated. It really bore no comparison to that of JACKSON. The difference was almost as wide as the iron will and domineering spirit of the President and the gracious suavity of his Secretary of State. The men who were ostracised from the party, or who, from a sense of self-respect, abandoned it, have since acknowledged this, and the world will sooner or later learn to put the true estimate upon the character of the Chief of the White House and the Hermitage. He was, unquestionably, first in all the great intrigues of his own party, as he was first in their fear and respect, and to undoubted firmness and decision in civil as in military administration, and sincere devotion to the Union of the States, he added a cunning that knew no reasonable bounds, either in his earlier frontier life in Tennessee, or in the caucus room at Washington. No one ought to know how to appreciate this quality in the Old Hero better than Mr. BENTON, for he had been made to feel with what facility he could marshal his fighting men, and with what adroitness he could set them upon any object of his personal or political vengeance. Yet Mr. B. tells the world that in the affair with Mr. CALHOUN, General JACKSON was the injured party; kept in ignorance, as it were, for ten long years, of the real part borne by the great Carolinian in the discussion of the Florida charges in Mr. MONROE's Cabinet. Mr. CRALLE, on the other hand, is quite sure that Mr. CALHOUN believed General JACKSON the chief actor, in fact, as the chief in position, in the conspiracy which compassed the break-up of 1831. "I wish," (said Mr. CALHOUN, in his conversations with Mr. CRALLE,) "for his own sake that it were not so; but, in my opinion, there is not the least doubt whatever that he (JACKSON) was not only privy to the whole scheme from the first, but that he took an active part in it to the end." Mr. CRALLE adds, "he was the very life, the soul of the whole intrigue." He was equally the life and soul of the conspiracy against the Administration of ADAMS and CLAY, which opened with the charge of bargain and sale against these distinguished men. The first suggestion that Mr. CLAY might place himself in the line of safe precedents for the succession, by the vote he should give in the House, as between JACKSON, ADAMS and CRAWFORD, came from Mr. BUCHANAN, of Pennsylvania, the confidential friend of General JACKSON, then present in Washington City. It was made, if we mistake not, to Mr. CLAY in person, who peremptorily declined the insidious, but sufficiently palpable overture. He was no friend to Gen. JACKSON, personally, and could be made no friend politically, with his then sense of his unfitness for the Presidency, and here the subject dropped, until JACKSON, after his defeat, caused the imputation to be made that CLAY had been bought by ADAMS, by a tender of the State Department, and that BUCHANAN was his (JACKSON's) witness, that such were the terms of the bargain. Of course, Mr. B. corrected this impression, but he never told the world what did take place between himself, as the friend, if not the emissary of JACKSON and Mr. CLAY, nor did Mr. C. himself feel at liberty to reveal it for twenty years afterwards.

Next to General JACKSON, himself, Mr. VAN BUREN, perhaps, deserves to be ranked in the combination against the ADAMS Administration. It was the stepping stone to his own advancement to the Presidency, but his after career was far less illustrious, in every point of view, than that of the great and good New-Englander. Like Mr. ADAMS he was overthrown at the close of his first term; but not like him, by a wide-spread and systematic conspiracy against an able and eminently useful President. He fell by the wholesale dissention of the rank and file of his own party, who were dissatisfied with an unwise administration of the Government. Neither Spoils nor Patronage, widely and freely dispensed, could save him. His defeat was overwhelming, but he retired to his New-York home not without hope that the Democratic Convention of 1844 would restore him to power. In this, too, he was doomed to disappointment; foiled, at the last moment, by the Chief of the Hermitage, who as surely planned the nomination of POLK on the Texas issue, as he had previously planned the elevation of VAN BUREN on the downfall of CALHOUN. In subsequent retirement, Mr. V. B. has acted with dignity, perhaps, but not always with fidelity to the party who made him all he had ever been. He defeated CASS in 1848 by the Buffalo movement, and the great body of the Democracy of the country will never forgive him the act. His political course is run, and there are few, we apprehend, who will say that its close is as memorable, or its results as useful to the country, as the career of the "old man eloquent," who looked upon the last of earth from the floor of the National Councils.

Mr. CALHOUN, the remaining member of the JACKSON trio, was made to feel in his after life, the barrenness and heartlessness of the victory over ADAMS and CLAY. He had done much to elevate General JACKSON. He was himself the favorite of Pennsylvania in 1824 for the Presidency. He yielded his claims to Gen. J., and accepted the nomination for the second office and was elected by the people. The influence of his high position was afterwards used to defeat the reelection of Mr. ADAMS; his own being secure without any effort in this direction. He voluntarily cast his fortunes with the JACKSON interest. Tennessee, New-York and South Carolina were in a common league. Its work was accomplished, but the rewards earned, like Dead Sea fruit, to bitter ashes, at the great Carolinian's touch. He was soon driven from all influence in the new Administration; his friends dotted its patronage, and he himself superceded as Vice President by Mr. VAN BUREN, at the instance of the Chief of the party. His after career is known to the country. It was altogether, as chequered as it was in many respects, unfortunate and sectional. His countrymen will remember it with more admiration for his great, but misused ability, than respect for his counsels or confidence in his theories. Neither his compact and fascinating speeches in the Senate, nor his services in the Cabinet, are likely to quality, in the admiration of posterity, the heresy of Nullification, or drown the recollection of the wrongs he did to the Administration of JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, and the part he bore in the inauguration of the JACKSON rule.

Retaliation or Disunion—Letter from John C. Calhoun.

From the Charleston Mercury.

The subjoined letter from Mr. CALHOUN, it is stated by one of our exchanges, has been given to the public within the past few days. Anything from his pen will be acceptable to our readers. It is on the subject of retaliation by the South for the wrongs and indignities heaped upon her by the Abolition States:

FORT HILL, Oct. 4, 1847.

MY DEAR SIR: * * * * * But to come to the subject of your letter. I am much gratified with its tone and views, and concur entirely in the opinion you express, that, instead of shunning, we ought to court the issue with the North on the Slavery question. I would even go one step further, and add, that it is our duty, due to ourselves, to the Union, and our political institutions, to force the issue on the North. We are now stronger relatively than we shall be hereafter politically and morally. Unless we bring on the issue, delay to us will be dangerous indeed.

It is the true policy of those enemies who seek our destruction. Its effects are, have been and will be, to weaken us politically and morally, and to strengthen them. Such has been my opinion from the first. Had the South, or even my own State, backed me, I would have forced the issue on the North in 1835, when the spirit of Abolition first developed itself to any considerable extent. It is a true maxim to meet danger on the frontier, in politics as well as war.

Thus thinking, I am of the impression that, if the South act as it ought, the Wilmot Proviso, instead of proving to be the means of successfully assailing us and our peculiar institutions, may be made the occasion of successfully asserting our equality and right, by enabling us to force the issue on the North. Something of the kind was indispensable to rouse and unite the South. On the contrary, if we should not meet it as we ought, I fear, greatly fear, our doom will be fixed. It would prove that we either have not the sense or spirit to defend ourselves and our institutions.

But, in making up the issue, we must look far beyond the proviso. It is but one of many acts of aggression, and, in my opinion, by no means, the most dangerous and degrading, though more striking and palpable.

I regard the recent act of Pennsylvania, and laws of that description passed by other States, intended to prevent or embarrass the reclamation of fugitive slaves, or to liberate our domestics when traveling with them in non-slaveholding States, as unconstitutional. Insulting as it is, it is even more dangerous.

I go further, and hold that if we have a right to hold our slaves, we have a right to hold them in peace and quiet, and that the toleration in the non-slaveholding States of the establishment of societies and presses, and the delivery of lectures with the express intention of calling in question our right to our slaves, and of seducing and abducting them from the service of their masters, and finally overthrowing the institution itself, is not only a violation of international laws, but also of the Federal compact. I hold, also, that we cannot acquiesce in such wrongs without the certain destruction of the relation of master and slave, and without the ruin of the South.

With this impression, I would regard any compromise or adjustment of the proviso, or even its defeat, without meeting the danger in its whole length and breadth, as very unfortunate for us. It would lull us to sleep again without removing the danger or materially demolishing it.

This brings up the question, how can it be so met without resorting to the dissolution of the Union? I say without its dissolution, for in my opinion a high and sacred regard for the Constitution, as well as the dictates of wisdom, make it our duty in this case, as well as all others, not to resort to, or even to look to, that extreme remedy until all others have failed, and then only in defence of our liberty and safety.

There is, in my opinion, but one way in which it can be met, and that is the one indicated in my letter to Mr. ———, and to which you allude in your letter to me, viz., by retaliation.

Why I think so I shall now proceed to explain. The Constitution of the United States is a complex instrument, consisting of many different parts. It created a government, and designated the functionaries for carrying it into effect. It granted powers and imposed limitations to prevent abuse and oppression; and, finally, it prohibited the States from doing certain acts, and made it their duty to perform certain stipulations towards each other, into which they entered in ratifying the Constitution, and thereby solemnly pledge themselves to perform faithfully. Of these stipulations some are favorable to the slave States and others to the non-slaveholding States, or, more briefly, some to the Southern and the others to the Northern.

Of the former the most striking is that which stipulates the delivery up by the latter of fugitive slaves, and which clearly involves the principle that non-slaveholding States should adopt no measure to seduce our slaves, or to abstract them from their masters, or to weaken or destroy our right to them. The legislation of these States for the last twelve years has, either directly or indirectly, by act or omission, been in violation of this leading stipulation in our favor; and the recent act of Pennsylvania has put it aside openly, without pretext or attempt at justification, trampling at the same time under foot the act of Congress to carry it into effect.

To understand the full force and effect of the stipulation in our favor it must be borne in mind that it has the character of what is called extradition treaties; that is, treaties to deliver up fugitives from justice, which in good faith require not only that the party where the fugitive is found shall place no impediment in the way of his reclamation, or even to stand neutral, but that he shall take active measures to seize and deliver him up.

Against this flagrant breach of faith, more sacred than any treaty stipulation, by this act of Pennsylvania and similar acts of other States, the Constitution affords no effectual remedy. The appeal to the Federal Court is a mere farce. The expense, the delay and the means it affords for the escape of the slave, makes it no remedy at all, while our principles and safety will not permit us to resort for remedy to the principles of the force bill, passed to compel the obedience of this State.

There is and can be but one remedy short of disunion, and that is to retaliate on our part by refusing to fulfill the stipulations in their favor, or such as we may select as the most efficient. Among these, the right of their ships and commerce to enter and depart from our ports is the most effectual, and can be enforced.

That the refusal on their part would justify us to refuse to fulfill on our part those in their favor is too clear to admit of argument. That it would be effectual in compelling them to fulfill those in our favor can hardly be doubted, when the immense profit they make by trade and navigation out of us is regarded, and also the advantages we would derive from the direct trade it would establish between the rest of the world and our ports.

My impression is that it should be restricted to sea-going vessels, which would leave open the trade of the valley of the Mississippi to New-Orleans by river and to the other southern cities by railroad; and tend thereby to detach the northwestern from the northeastern States.

Nor is there any impediment from the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States. The right of the States to adopt laws to protect their health, their internal policy and peace and safety is paramount to the right of Congress to regulate commerce. You find the subject fully urged in my report on the subject of circulating incendiary publications through mail and the speech made on the occasion. Several of the States have acted on it in reference to the subject of abolition, and especially this State and Virginia.

There is but one practical difficulty in the way, and that is, to give it force it will require the cooperation of all the slaveholding States lying on the Atlantic and the Gulf. Without that it would be ineffective. To get that is the great point, and for that purpose a Convention of the Southern States is indispensable.

Let this be called, and let it adopt measures to bring about the cooperation, and I would undertake the rest. The non-slaveholding States would be compelled to observe the stipulations of the Constitution in our favor, or abandon their trade with us, or to take measures to coerce us, which would throw on them the responsibility of dissolving the Union. Which they would choose I do not think doubtful. Their unbounded avarice would be the end control them.

Let a Convention be called, let it recommend to the Slaveholding States to take the course advised, giving, say, one year's notice before the act of the several States shall go into effect; and the issue would fairly be made up and our safety and triumph certain.

I have written fully, hurriedly, and in the midst of the pressure of my engagement, but I hope, with sufficient clearness to be fully understood. I aimed at nothing higher. I shall be happy to hear from you during the session of your Legislature, and at all times when you find it convenient to write.

Yours truly, J. C. CALHOUN.

PERCY WALKER, Esq., Mobile.

FOREIGN EXTRACTS.

Effect of the War on the Competition of England and the United States.

Mr. BRIGHT, in a recent speech on the War, made the following striking remarks on the effect which its expense must must have on the commercial rivalry of the United States with England:

"He would ask the noble lord's attention for five minutes to a country called the United States of America. On Tuesday last there were listening to the debates two distinguished men who had filled the office of President of the United States—a position not less in honor and dignity than that of any crowned monarch on the surface of the globe. [Hear, hear.] The United States was peaceably the country which was running the race with us in power and greatness. Its population at the next census would exceed that of the United Kingdom. In its manufactures and its general industry, it was by far the most formidable rival that the manufacturers of this country could meet with. That country had ten steamers for our one. Her magnificent steamships came across the Atlantic in a shorter time than the steamships of this country, and the finest vessels sailing from England to the Australian colonies had been built in the United States. In shipbuilding they were therefore in some respects excelling this country. Now let the house look at our position this year as compared with that of the United States. The Chancellor of the Exchequer required £86,000,000 to carry on the various departments of the Government and our vast military expenses. The United States had at this moment in her treasury enough to pay off all her debts. Taking into account all the expenses of the United States Government, and deducting that expenditure from our £86,000,000 it would be found that we are paying £75,000,000 more than the people of the United States. Honorable gentlemen knew what it was to run a race weighted. He had heard of one horse that won every race to a certain time. That horse was once weighted and lost that race, and it was stated in the annals of the turf that that horse never won a race afterwards. [Laughter.] If that was true of a horse, it was much more true of a nation. When a nation once stepped backward, it was difficult to recover its position, and if another nation had passed it in the race, it was almost impossible ever to come up with it again. He wished to address honorable gentlemen opposite who were the owners of vast, productive, beautiful, and, he hoped, unencumbered estates in various parts of the kingdom. [Laughter.] This country was only ten days' sail from the United States, and within ten years it was probable we should be able to communicate as quickly with the United States as we could with the Crimea, and, he hoped, for much better objects. [Hear, hear.] The people of America were our people. There were few families in England who had not friends or relations connected with the United States, or settled in that country, and the attachments of people to the place of their birth were to some extent weakened by the facility with which men could travel over the world in the course of a few weeks. Now, when the capital of the greatest Bank in Lombard-street could be transferred on a small sheet of paper by one post, could any one believe that the imposition of £75,000,000 of taxes in this country over and above that of an equal population in the United States would have no effect on the transfer of capital to the United States; and if capital, of trade; and if trade, of the population and industry, and everything that formed the sinews and powers of this great empire? He would ask honorable gentlemen opposite as the owners of these estates to bear in mind what was said by the right honorable gentleman, the President of the Board of Works, and he was sorry to speak of him by that appellation. The right honorable gentleman spoke of the war going on for six years with undiminished resources. Now, nothing was so easy as for a Cornish Baronet, with he was afraid to say how many thousand a year, to look with the utmost complacency on the calamities which might befall others. [Hear, hear, hear.] Six years of war at £75,000,000 per annum above the expenditure of the United States would give a balance of £450,000,000 against the people of this country. [Hear, hear.] Was he talking to sane men when it was necessary to bring such facts before them; and how could any one trust such a vast issue in the hands of the noble lords and the right honorable gentlemen now on the treasury bench? [Hear, hear.]

The New Newspaper Press of England.

The London Times, which, as it is the most prosperous journal in the world, will suffer most from any change which encourages competition, thus speaks of the effect of the law just passed abolishing the stamp duty in England:

"Manchester is preparing to take advantage largely of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's new measure for repealing the stamp duty. Little more than 12 months ago there were only three newspapers—one weekly, and the other two semi-weekly journals; now there are to be one daily evening and four daily morning papers. The Examiner and Times have given notice that they will reduce the price on Wednesdays and Saturdays from 5d. to 3d. each paper, and publish on the other four days of the week, under the title of the Manchester Daily Times, at 1½d., and issue an afternoon paper called the Evening News at 1d. The Manchester Guardian has published a much more simple bill of fare, announcing a daily publication instead of a semi-weekly one, and, instead of charging 10d. for the two, giving six papers for 5s. per week. In other words, the Guardian will be issued at 9d. instead of 5d. each paper, including once a week at least a large supplementary sheet. Then, in addition to these three daily papers, there is the existing War Telegraph, and the daily Express is to be resuscitated. Several new weekly papers are also projected. The Chancellor of the Exchequer expressed an opinion that there would not be much addition to the number of newspapers when the stamp duty was repealed, but that the circulation of existing papers would be increased; but the opinion of people much more likely to be able to form a correct estimate of the sentiments and dispositions of country printers is very different. Few towns of more than 2,000 inhabitants, and having a printing press, it is thought, will be long without a weekly newspaper, large or small; so that, before 12 months have elapsed, it will be more likely that, instead of a few, we shall have 1,000 to 1,500 additional political instructors. The tone of most of them, in times of great popular excitement, it may be presumed, will be taken from one or two of the leading London morning papers, and the power of the press on public opinion will be felt to an extent of which we have now but a faint conception.

What Taxes Mean.

Mr. BRIGHT, in one of his late speeches on the war, thus forcibly set forth the effect of heavy taxation on the life and happiness of the people:

"I ask honorable gentlemen to consider what it is that taxes mean. What is it but the clothing and furniture of many a poor family in Lancashire or Yorkshire; medical attendance to many a sick wife; the school pence of three or four little children; hopeless toil to the father of the family, penury through his life, a cheerless old age; and, if I may quote the language of the poet of humble life, last of all "the little bell tolled hastily for the pauper's funeral." [Hear, hear.] That is what taxes mean. The honorable member for Dorsetshire spoke in a manner that I thought rather flippant and hardly generous, of some of us on this bench some nights ago. Let me tell him that the laborers of Dorsetshire and the weavers and spinners of Lancashire are toiling, and must toil, harder, longer, and with smaller remuneration, for every hundred pounds that you exact in taxes from the people beyond what is just and necessary for the just and judicious requirements of the exchequer of the country. I hope then, that I shall be permitted to treat the question on this ground. And recollect that whatever anxiety there may be in the military and naval departments of the service, there is not one of the children in the cottages who will not feel the effects of this war. If you darken the homes and destroy the hopes of the population in the humble dwellings of the country, you also darken the hopes and the prospects of the offspring of our Queen, in whom are bound up as much of the interest and so many of the hopes of the people of this country."

Incredible Credulity.

From Galignani.

The Tribunal of Correctional Police on Wednesday tried by default a man named Sourel and a woman named TESSIER, on a charge of swindling. The circumstances of the case were of such an extraordinary character as to be almost incredible. A wealthy farmer and his wife, named CHOTAR, residing at Clichy, near Paris, took Sourel into their service in the month of June, 1854. They were exceedingly weak-minded people, and the man soon obtained a complete ascendancy over them. After a while, he told CHOTAR that his mother-in-law was a pagan. CHOTAR became alarmed at the idea of having anything to do with such a person, and by the man's advice, he broke off all communications with her, and made his wife do the same. Sourel afterwards made the foolish couple believe that all their friends and acquaintance were pagans, and they shunned them accordingly. When he had thus separated them from all society, he told them that he was a member of the famous "Society of Mesmimsne," which could do everything that it wished, which enjoyed perfect happiness, and which gave to each of its members 12fr. a week, and 5 per cent. of all sums deposited in its hands. The chiefs of the society were, he said, called patriarchs, sturdcots, and deacons; and a small plaster image, which he produced was, he added, that of the mother of the association, and was possessed of miraculous qualities. His statements made a profound impression on their minds, and they earnestly demanded admission into the society. He said that he would try to get them in, and he required them to practice certain ceremonies to purify themselves previously. He also required the women to submit to what he called naturalization, which was giving herself up to him; but this she did with the full consent of her husband. He strictly forbade them to speak to any pagan of what was taking place; and said that, if they did, they would be burned alive, and that the hooks which held up the sky would give way, and that it would fall and crush them. While this was going on he made the silly couple give him as much money as he thought they could procure; he also made them provide him with clothing, and let him take away nearly all their furniture, bit by bit. In the course of two years he got from them as much as 12,000f. in money. In addition to the perfect happiness which they were destined to enjoy, when they should be admitted members of the society, he frequently did them the honor of causing the plaster image representing the mother, to write letters to them; but in all cases the letters contained commands to them to make him presents. He also held out a vague promise to CHOTAR, that perhaps he might be able in the course of one hundred and fourteen years to get him raised to the dignity of deacon. The man carried on these audacious frauds for upwards of two years, and would probably have continued his operations still, if a young woman named PERVAL, whom he attempted to initiate into the mysteries of the society, had not discovered what he was doing, and made disclosures to the police. In all his proceedings, the man was seconded by the woman TESSIER, who lived with him. The Commissary of Police, on hearing the details of the case, could not at first believe them, and whilst he was making inquiries the man and woman deemed it prudent to take to flight. It has not since been possible to discover their retreat. The Tribunal sentenced them severally to five years' imprisonment and fifty francs fine.

A Sad Tragedy in the Crimea.

The following is an extract of a letter from the camp before Sebastopol, dated May 22: "A sad tragedy occurred this morning at the entrance to the Karabelnaia ravine. A body of French troops was marching down to furnish the usual relief to the picket in the ravine. The relief was composed of part of the 22d battalion of the 25th Regiment of the Line. On the way Lieut. DELART, of the grenadier company, had occasion to check a soldier, who, being partly intoxicated, was marching very irregularly, and giving expression to angry sentiments in a loud tone. Scarcely had the reprimand being given when the man replied: 'Lieutenant, you've punished me often enough—you shall not punish me any more,' and on the instant leveling his musket, he fired and shot him through the body. The unfortunate officer, a man of powerful frame and popular in the regiment, at once fell. He was carried to one of the English hospitals near at hand, and died almost immediately after his arrival. The murderer was secured without delay, and was being taken back under escort to the head-quarters of his regiment, when a general murmur arose from the men for his instant punishment. The general in command of the trenches was in the ravine close by, and after a brief consultation between him and the commandant of the relief, a council was held and the man condemned to be shot. About 200 yards down the ravine, and at a slight elevation above it on the side of Frenchman's-hill, a small heap of stones was observed with a clear space before it. To this the unhappy culprit was brought, while on either side the battalion was drawn up in companies, and here he received the fire of twelve muskets from a party placed on the opposite side of the ravine. He fell forward pierced by eight bullets, and after a short address from the general the regiment proceeded on its way. Half an hour scarcely elapsed between the perpetration of the crime and the execution of the criminal. The soldier had become sober immediately after committing the murder. He had seen 18 years' service, and was spoken of as a brave and able man."

A Bold Dragoon.

In one of the affairs at Balaklava, an English dragoon named EDWARD MALONE was pursued by seven Russian cavalry, the foremost of whom passed a lance at him; by shifting his position he avoided it, but it entered the body of his horse, and both lay prostrate on the ground. MALONE, releasing himself as soon as possible from his poor animal, sprung on his feet, when he saw himself surrounded by seven of the enemy's lancers. It momentarily occurred to him, that by keeping himself in constant motion, he should be a more difficult object for these seven to practice upon, and he resolved to sell his life as dearly as possible. In this unequal contest, his plan was to face as many as he could, strike the lance of the nearest upwards, instantly thrusting his sabre into his antagonist. In this manner he had actually dispatched three, and was engaged with a fourth, when assistance coming up, the others fled, not however without having inflicted twelve lance wounds on MALONE. As may be imagined he was exhausted from loss of blood, muscular exertion and the excitement naturally attendant on a man on foot contending for so long a period with seven horsemen, during which time he received his numerous wounds. EDWARD MALONE, after being supplied with some spirit from a fallen Russian, rallied, and determined if possible to try his prowess once more, and he soon had the opportunity, on a Russian sergeant of as fine stature as himself, whom, after exchanging a few cuts, he felled to the ground in the sight of several witnesses.

British Vessel Detained at the Vineyard—Men Supposed to have been Kidnapped for the Crimean.

From the New-Bedford Standard, June 22.

We learn that the British hermaphrodite brig Buffalo, of Maitland, Nova Scotia, SYMONDS, master, was boarded at Tarpaulin Cove yesterday, where she put in for a harbor, by the United States cutter James Campbell, Capt. CLARK, and from certain suspicious circumstances, was detained and taken to Holmes' Hole, where she now remains. It appears that the Buffalo cleared at New-York, on the 19th inst., for Miramichi, N. B., and sailed on the same evening.

Her papers were properly endorsed by the British Consul, but about twenty men were on board as steerage passengers, who stated that they embarked in the night, at New-York, and that they had every reason to believe, from intimations they had received, that they were to be placed on board a British cruiser immediately on the arrival of the brig at her port of destination, and sent to the Crimea for service in the army. They were hired in New-York to work on a railroad in Nova Scotia, and with this intention took passage in the brig. They claimed the protection of the United States Government, which was, of course, promptly granted them. No evidence of their being on board appeared in the brig's papers, although, as we learn, the papers were entirely correct so far as the cabin passengers were concerned.

The suspicions of the men were first created that they were to be so service for John Bull in fighting the Russians, instead of engaging in the more peaceful pursuit of railroad building, by certain information received from a servant of a cabin passenger, who is believed to be an officer in the British [illegible] away. There were also other suspicious circumstances tending to show some little foundation for the belief of the men as to their final destination.

The whole affair is lodged in the hands of C. H. Nourse, Esq., Collector of Edgartown, who will give it all proper attention. If a satisfactory explanation shall be given by the officers of the brig, she will no doubt be permitted to depart. Otherwise she will be detained and legally dealt with.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

Another Alleged Outrage.

From the Leavenworth Herald, June 16.

We can truly say that we never listened to the recital of a more gross and infernal outrage, than was recently perpetrated on a Mr. WM. J. OSBORN, by a gang of Cincinnati Abolitionists, known as the Manhattan Town Company. The facts of the case we give, as they are narrated to us. On the 7th of the present month, while Mr. OSBORN was working on his claim on the Kansas River, at the mouth of the Blue, near the town site of the Manhattan Company, some fifteen or twenty men of the Manhattan Town Company, armed with guns, pistols and clubs, came on the premises and peremptorily ordered him to leave his property in fifteen minutes, threatening to forcibly whip him, if he did not obey their orders, and assuring him at the same time, with all apparent sincerity, that they would drown him in the Kansas River, if ever he again made his appearance in that neighborhood. Mr. OSBORN knowing that he had done nothing to warrant such violent proceedings, and that the Abolitionists had no earthly right to the ownership of his claim, refused to leave in demanded. At the expiration of the fifteen minutes, Mr. OSBORN, still indefinitely at his refusal to leave, was violently seized, and taken by force on board the steamboat Hartford, which was brought out from Cincinnati, and is still used by this company as a temporary shelter, for lodging and other purposes of living. There he was abused, derided at, and offered every revolting insult that the base, cowardly and infamous villains could think of. After a custody of some hour or two, during which time every scheme and threat was brought into requisition with the view of extorting a promise from Mr. OSBORN to leave, and give up his claim to them, he was released, with the admonition that if he was seen in that neighborhood on the following day, he would be hung or drowned in the Kansas river.

Mr. OSBORN, after his enlargement, fearing some violence from these lawless desperadoes, repaired to the house of a friend some three miles distant from the scene of this diabolical outrage, where he remained over till the following Thursday.

On his return, supposing the excitement had allayed, and that the Abolitionists had abandoned all idea of attempting to gain possession of his claim by brute force, he stopped at the town site of Manhattan, for the purpose of learning the intention of this gratical band, as to their future course with him. Going aboard of the steamboat Hartford, with the view of holding some conversation with the leader of this company relative to his case, he was saluted most blandly and deferentially by the so-called "Captain," who, after a few minutes conversation with him, gave a signal, which was immediately followed by the hideous yells of some twelve or fifteen men, who, laying hands on Mr. OSBORN, threw him into the cabin, where he was kept some hour or more. Charges were then preferred against Mr. OSBORN of having threatened to destroy their boat Hartford, which they said they could substantiate. Mr. OSBORN disclaimed the utterance of any such threats as were imputed to him, and challenged the company to sustain their allegations. He was then taken out to Mr. HASWELL for trial, where they utterly failed to produce the slightest shadow of evidence against him. Not satisfied with this, he was taken back to the steamboat Hartford, where they held him in custody some two hours, endeavoring to worm out of him a promise to leave. During his confinement on board of the Hartford, his horse was taken possession of, rode around at 2:40 time, beaten and otherwise maltreated in the most inhuman manner.

Mr. OSBORN passed through our city on Monday evening last, en route for Wyandot, where we believe he has friends, if not relatives. We had the pleasure of a call from him, and heard from his own lips an account of this infamous and unparalleled outrage. In the course of his conversation, he mentioned that the notorious S. D. HOUSTON, the Abolition (would-be) Representative of the Fawnee District, is President of this infernal company, and that their infamous conduct had met with his most unqualified sanction.

Mr. OSBORN is a young man, originally from New-York, if we mistake not, highly respected and esteemed, a lawyer by profession, and was at one time connected with this paper in the capacity of editor. He seems to have been guilty of no offence that would even extenuate such an outrage. He tells us that the Manhattan Town Company had no cause for taking such violent and outrageous steps with him, and the only excuse they plead is, that Mr. OSBORN was an intruder, which he assures us was not the case. We are inclined to believe Mr. OSBORN was driven away on account of his being a strong advocate and zealous supporter of the institution of Slavery.

The Man Over the Falls of Niagara.

From the Buffalo Express, June 25.

The fact that a man went over the great American Falls during Saturday forenoon, was communicated by telegraph the same afternoon. We have since received the following letter from a friend:

NIAGARA FALLS, June 23—10 A. M.

Another man over the Falls! BACHMAN, at the Grist Mill, a few rods above the Cataract House, saw him from the rear of the mill coming down in a boat. His oars were hanging in the row-locks, and he was sitting with his arms folded expecting for help. Mr. BACHMAN called to him to seize his oars. A few well-directed strokes would have brought him to the shore; but on he went, until he came opposite the back piazza of the Cataract House, where the boat capsized. He was seen to come up once and throw out his arms. Mr. M. says he was a young man, about twenty years old.

The probability is that the poor fellow, having by some means that will never be explained found himself in the rapids, became paralyzed with horror, and was unable to use any exertions to prevent his awful fate. Who can imagine his sensations as he neared the fatal precipice, whose roar sounded like a death-knell in his terrified ears, or the mad delirium that seized upon him at the thought of certain and terrible destruction? It was all done in a moment—a struggle, a shriek, a plunge, and a soul went home! It was all done in a moment—but it told upon Eternity.

MAGNIFICENT SPECTACLE IN THE HEAVENS.—About 6½ o'clock on Friday evening it began to rain. The drops came down so easily that it seemed as if they slipped down—slipped as a falling star slips noiselessly and serenely through the slippery midnight; and the drops continued falling more and more rapidly, as if they were getting under an uncontrollable headway, until at last the water poured down in a torrent, and thus it poured until the gutters reared, and everything looked fresh and green again. At last, the cisterns of the sky were emptied, and then there sprung upon the heavens the most beautiful vision that our eyes ever beheld. A double rainbow spanned the eastern horizon, standing out in exquisite relief from a cool, gray ground, while the western sky was flooded and flushed with a golden glory, as if the walls of the celestial city had been thrown down by a sudden convulsion, and the sacred effulgence burst out upon the world. It was a sight long to be remembered

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

Abbott's Napoleon.

THE HISTORY OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. By JOHN C. ABBOTT. With Maps and Illustrations. Two Volumes. Octavo. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS.

A fair biography of NAPOLEON, emphatically the foremost man of all the world, has long been a desideratum. Such has not yet been produced in France, though numerous year since have thence been given to the world in abundance. Such has not been published in England, though the almost peer—those of LOCKHART, SCOTT, HAZLITT and ALISON—have been employed. Nor, in truth, is it exactly by a European that a reliable Life of NAPOLEON can be written, for a long time at least. France, which owes him so much, cannot but greatly and would exalt him exclusively; the rest of Europe, which was banded against him and hunted him down as if he were a destructive monster, is not likely in our generation to render him anything but stern justice. The volumes before us, by an American writer, take a view of his character and conduct considerably at variance with that of most English writers. Mr. ABBOTT has gone on the principle of such always partial. The history of NAPOLEON, he says, "has often been written by his enemies. This narrative is from the pen of one who reverses and loves him." Lord BYRON said that partiality was a merit in a historian, as it made him in earnest. This book, therefore, must be very meritorious, inasmuch as Mr. ABBOTT is avowedly a partisan—giving good reasons in abundance for the faith which is in him.

There has already been no small degree of controversy respecting this work before it appeared in its present form. The work was first published, month after month, in Harper's Magazine, where it attracted much notice, and was considerable popularity from the lucidity of its narrative, the fullness of its interesting details, the abundance of its facts, the accuracy of its time, and the beauty and abundance of its engravings. From time to time, amid much praise, there has been some censure cast upon the author for having presented a view of NAPOLEON's life, which, albeit of unquestionable accuracy, was more vindictory than biographies of that illustrious man hitherto have been, here and in England. We do not doubt the truth of Mr. ABBOTT's assertion that "he admires NAPOLEON because he abhorred war," but when it is added that he "did everything in his power to avert that dire calamity," we cannot help thinking of the six years' contest in Spain and Portugal, for which there really was not the shadow of an excuse. The general statement that NAPOLEON did not battle from the mere desire to wage war, or for selfish purposes, is correct, we doubt not.

War elevated NAPOLEON from the humble rank of a subaltern to the throne and Empire of CHARLEMAGNE. At Toulon, at the age of five-and-twenty, when only a lieutenant of artillery, he obtained a reputation which caused him to be employed, by the Directory, to put down the disturbances of Paris, in October 1795. His firmness established the government of the Directory, which acknowledged his services by giving him the command of the army of Italy, at the age of twenty-seven. In this capacity his military genius gained victory after victory, and completely defeated monarchical combinations as represented by Austria. His successes made him too popular, and, to get him out of the way, he was appointed to lead the expedition which France sent against Egypt. He gained fresh laurels there, returned to Paris at the crisis when such a master mind was most required, and by a coup d'état which met with general approbation, overturned the weak, tottering Government; established the Consulate; took the leading place in the new Executive; went to battle against the Austrians, who threatened the very soil of France; again defeated them; subjugated their Italian possessions; and by the peace of Luneville pacified the Continent of Europe. It cannot be truly alleged that during this unusually active military life, extending over several years, NAPOLEON was actuated by any desire for war, on its own or his own account. It was his duty, as a French soldier, to engage in these contests. The honor, the glory, the very existence of France as an independent nation, rendered war not only necessary but inevitable.

The universality of NAPOLEON's genius was not exhibited until after he had pacified Europe. In June 1801, when this was effected, he was virtually as much monarch of France as if he had succeeded to power by hereditary descent. In peace, his administrative faculties came into play, and produced a radical reform of the whole system of internal government. Then, too, did he commence the framing of the Code Napoleon, under which, not only in France, but in a great part of Europe, justice is administered to this day. He applied himself to the improvement of Paris, so as to make it what PHILLIPS calls "the miniature metropolis of the world." Art, science, and literature, were warmly encouraged by him. What it was in his power to do for the encouragement, improvement, and extension of commerce, manufactures, and agriculture, he cheerfully performed. He found France impoverished, feeble, disturbed at home, and despised abroad—his arms and his administration made her prosperous, powerful, united and respected. Everywhere, the provinces, cities, and towns under his rule received important advantages from his foresight, his activity and his liberal expenditure. Canals and public roads were created at vast cost, to facilitate internal and commercial intercourse. He did more for France in two years than the three last Bourbon Kings had done in a hundred.

In 1803, NAPOLEON was literally forced into a war with England. The restoration of the Bourbons was the ruling idea of the closing years of PITT's ministerial autocracy, and everything led him to expect that NAPOLEON would become the crowned, as he already was the actual ruler of France. The English fleets swept the seas, and, at Trafalgar, in October, 1805, NELSON annihilated the naval armament of France. This disaster took place some nine months after NAPOLEON had been elevated to the throne of France by the will of her people, with the title of Emperor. It prevented his proceeding with the invasion of England, for which vast preparations had been made at Boulogne, and drove him to a line of defence against a coalition between Austria and Russia, organized by English diplomacy, and cemented, as well as paid for, by English gold. In the field he broke down this conspiracy, and, in the following year, defeated another between Prussia and Russia. These two campaigns, it should be noted, were defensive. The treaty of Tilsit, in the Summer of 1807, agreed to by NAPOLEON and ALEXANDER of Russia, almost divided the European Continent between them.

NAPOLEON should have rested here. He was now approaching the age of forty, a period of life in which, after a toilsome and troubled, though glorious and fortunate career, he might hope to pause from military labors, and quietly reign over the millions who had placed him at their head. He knew them well, and though he held the reins with an iron gauntlet but thinly covered with a velvet glove, they were fully satisfied with the man of their choice.

In an evil hour, he abandoned the policy of duty and defence which had hitherto been so successful, and determined to annex Spain and Portugal to France by placing them under the nominal rule of his brother JOSEPH. The English, led by WELLESLEY, came to the rescue, and after six years' contest, drove NAPOLEON's armies out of Spain and won a battle on French soil. While the Spanish campaign was disastrously proceeding, Austria again took up arms—was again defeated, and in her submission gave a daughter of the house of HAPSBURG to NAPOLEON, as wife. He had, absurdly and ungratefully, compelled JOSEPHINE to consent to a divorce. The alliance with Russia broke up some other, and in 1812, NAPOLEON's disastrous invasion of the dominions of the Czar weakened France so much that the coalition against his course was determined. The invasion of Spain failed also to give success to his arms, and the campaign of 1813-14 ended in his enforced abdication and the return of the Bourbons. If one historical fact be more clear than another, it is that, up to 1808, while NAPOLEON's wars were only defensive, he invariably succeeded, (on land, at least,) but that, from the time when they became aggressive, his ruin loomed in the future.

The return from Elba, in 1815, was justifiable on many grounds—three of which are sufficient to state here, viz.: That the Bourbons did not pay him the small civil allowance guaranteed to him by treaty; that, in defiance of the compact made with him when he resigned the diadem, it was intended forcibly to remove him to St. Helena; and that the misgovernment of the Bourbons had made them so unpopular in France, that the return of NAPOLEON was the only thing which prevented a revolution at the time. Waterloo, and its disasters, are too well known to be made their glanced at.

Of NAPOLEON—the greatest man of his time, perhaps—in the variety, extent, combination and application of his mental powers—the greatest ruler the world has ever seen—Mr. ABBOTT gives a most interesting account in these volumes, and proves that he did not usurp the sovereignty of France;—that he did not govern for the promotion of his own personal or selfish aggrandizement.

On the third question—"Were the wars in which he was incessantly engaged provoked by his ambitious?" we have already given our opinion here. Had NAPOLEON not meddled, needlessly, in the affairs of Spain and Portugal, it is probable that he would have escaped the misfortunes and ruin of the succeeding seven years.

England, all through, was his determined foe, at cost of over six hundred millions sterling, which hangs like a millstone round her neck and threatens her with strangulation. Were it to be done over again, and now, England would have allowed the French to choose their own ruler, and NAPOLEON, replaced on the throne of France in 1815, without one drop of blood being spilled, would have been allowed, as we believe he greatly desired, to rule in peace and quietness, realising for France the great truth that

"Peace hath her victories as well as war."

We need not say that Abbott's Life of Napoleon will be a popular book. It is so already. Those who perused it, fragmentally, in Harper's Magazine, will be glad of the opportunity of possessing it in its present handsome, permanent, and inexpensive form. Mr. ABBOTT expresses "his obligations to Mr. C. E. DOEPLER for the beautiful series of illustrations which accompany the work, and also to Mr. JACOB WELLS for the maps which he has so accurately constructed." There also are two portraits, finely engraved on steel, one after SCHOPIN, representing NAPOLEON in his youth; the other, from PAUL DELAROCHE's well known painting, showing him as Emperor.

TO Professor BROCKLESBY, of Trinity College, Hartford, who has already written well upon Meteorology and Views of the Microscopic World, we are indebted for the Elements of Astronomy, for schools and families, published by FARNHAM & BRACE, New-York. The volume is liberally and intelligibly illustrated. It brings Astronomical knowledge down to the present date. It is full, without being diffuse, and terse without obscurity. Every scientific term is explained. The rules for determining the distances and magnitudes of the heavenly bodies are wholly amplified. The explanations of astronomical phenomena are here based on the real, instead of the apparent motions of the celestial bodies. For the assistance of teachers, questions for examination are appended. In all respects, therefore, the work may be recommended as a very complete and practical elementary treatise.

A. S. BARNES & Co., (N. Y.,) have published St. Petersburg: Its People, their Character and Institutions, by EDWARD JERRMANN. Translated from the original German by FREDERICK HARDMAN. It is one of the most readable books on Russia yet published. The author was manager of a German theatrical company during three years in St. Petersburg, and made good use of his eyes, ears and pen while he was there. On the whole, his view of the Russian capital is favorable, and he—he speaks warmly in favor of the late CZAR—considers Russia as gradually getting much improved in all its relations, social, intellectual, moral, political and governmental. The author's theatrical notes are lively and amusing—not the least interesting is a little sketch of poor HENRIETTA SONTAG.

The Presbyterian Quarterly Review, No. XIII. (M. W. DODD, New-York,) among several articles of a religious character, contains two which will be of interest to the general reader. The first discusses the pretensions of COLERIDGE as a Poet, is written with much critical acumen, and enthusiastically in favor of his claim to the bays. The other paper discusses the question: "Is effective writing necessarily volcanic?" The character and writings of the late Prof. HENRY REED and HOWARD BINNEY WALLACE, are discussed in a liberal spirit, as are also the literary merits of Mr. CURTIS and Mr. B. B. EDWARDS. The reviewer asserts that "the American writers are in advance of the prose writers in style."

The Maritime Flags of all Nations, published by F. BRADY, contains a generally correct set of National Maritime Flags, and rather rudely colored. It is the most complete collection of the sort ever published, at a low price. The geographical and statistical details make a valuable addition. How is it that while the pilot signals of Russia, France, England, Holland, Prussia, Austria, Portugal, Denmark and Naples are given, (some of them even repeated,) those of the United States are not indicated?

Cotton is King, is the name of a volume small in size, but filled with information, modestly announced as only "By an American," which has just been published by MOORE, WILSTACH, KEYS & Co., of Cincinnati. It treats of the history, culture and uses of Cotton, its relation to agriculture, manufactures and commerce, to the free colored people, and to those who held that Slavery is itself sinful. The statistical details are carefully collected, and supply a vast amount of information upon one of the best staple productions of this vast country.

Mr. JOHN WILEY, (of New-York,) has republished Principles of Agricultural Chemistry, with Special Reference to the late Researches made in England, by JUSTUS VON LIEBIG. This brochure, which is in reply to recent animadversions on LIEBIG's Mineral Theory, was published at Munich, in March, and has been translated by Professor GREGORY, of Edinburg. It clearly enunciates LIEBIG's summary of the actual relation between Chemistry and Agriculture.

The Temporal Power of the Pope, (published by CARLTON & PHILLIPS, New-York,) consists of a speech delivered by Mr. CHANDLER, in Congress, last January, with nine letters thereon, by JOHN MCCLINTOCK, D.D. We, who are only literary and political, leave this little book, and all of its class, to readers who are polemical and controversial.

We notice the Life, Eulogy and Great Orations of Daniel Webster only to say that the sale has run into its twenty-sixth thousand, and the Memoir, by LEWIS GAYLORD CLARKE, contains the leading facts of a great man's life, gracefully related. Not only the eulogy to, but the speech of HAYNE is included in this volume. Published by C. MCKEE, New-York.

NEW-YORK CITY.

American Institute—Farmers' Club.

A stated meeting of the Farmers' Club was held yesterday at noon, at the Repository, No. 351 Broadway. There was a larger attendance than usual. Judge BURNHAM occupied the Chair.

LORD KAIMES AND AGRICULTURE.

The Secretary read an interesting biographical sketch of Lord KAIMES, and more especially as connected with his strenuous efforts to promote agriculture. During his long career as a lawyer, philosopher and man of letters, he was described as being indefatigable in his labors to advance the agricultural interests in Scotland. He was first to suggest a Board of Agriculture in Scotland. He affected a survey of the state of agriculture throughout that realm. He succeeded in recovering many increases, and planted on them wheat and potatoes. He also gave special attention to the making of good roads.

PARAGUAY TEA.

The Secretary read a paper upon this article, which is in general domestic use in South America. It is mentioned as a highly ornamental tree, thriving wherever the Magnolia Grandi flora flourishes. Its effects are aperient, superior and diuretic. About an ounce of leaves in the quantity usually required by one person. It is recommended as much cheaper and altogether a healthier beverage than the China tea.

BARREL PRICES OF 1796.

A statement was submitted, giving the range of market prices for the year 1796. The prices given show that at the time referred to beef sold at 11 cents per lb., veal 16 cents, pork 14 cents, cheese 14 cents, bacon 16 cents, butter 25 cents, and potatoes $2 50 for 200 lbs.

NEW KIND OF HORSE SHOE.

Mr. SAWELL SHORT, of New-London, Conn., exhibited a horse shoe of novel construction. The main merit claimed for it was that it could be used without the ordinary nails,—the mode of fastening it was by means of a thin iron cap fitted as an external covering to the foot to which the body of the shoe is appended, the whole being kept on the hoof by a small nail rod, attaching the sides at their ends. It was alleged to be cheaper and more durable than the common shoe. The case would answer for many shoes, and each farmer could shoe his own horses.

Several objections to its practicability were raised—that it would infringe upon the hoof, cause contraction of the same, and prevent the proper exudation.

Mr. SHORT insisted that these objections would be found obviated upon trial.

The Chairman suggested that the proof of the pudding was in the eating.

THE MEASURE WORM.

Dr. GARDNER read the following letter relative to the molestations of the measure worm, from Dr. HARRIS, of Harvard University:

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., June 19, 1855.

Dr. AUGUSTUS K. GARDNER, No. 141 East Thirteenth-street, New-York:

Dear Sir: The "measure-worms" referred to in your letter are probably identical with the insects here called "canker-worms." They were prevalent in the vicinity of New-York sixty years ago, as appears by the remarks made upon them by Dr. MITCHELL, and published in the New-York Magazine for April, 1795, with a plate containing figures of the male and female insects. Wherever these insects have been once established, they are sure to return again at irregular intervals of time. You may satisfy yourself whether the measure-worms are the same as our canker-worms by comparing them with the descriptions and figures contained in my Treatise on Insects Injurious to Vegetation, which you will find in the Astor Library and at Mr. C. M. SAXTON's Agricultural Bookstore. That you failed to discover the adult insects when they issued from the ground in the Autumn and Spring, and were ascending the trees, may have been owing to your not looking for them carefully at the right time.

Turning the trees in October and the beginning of November, and again in March, if faithfully done, and repeated as often as necessary, will be found a good remedy. Circular troughs surrounding the trunks of trees and secured as described in my Treatise, and kept filled with cheap oil, have proved to be effectual in preventing the ascent of the insects when crawling up the trees.

During high winds many of the canker-worms are shaken down, and will immediately crawl towards the trees and ascend the trunks. If during the time when they are eating the leaves the trees are occasionally tarred, or if the troughs are kept filled with oil or with distilled gas tar, many of the worms will be caught and thereby destroyed. This has been the case here within the past ten days, during which thousands of the worms have been seen caught in the tar and unable to extricate themselves. By jarring and shaking the trees many of the worms will be dislodged, and if they hang suspended their threads can be broken with a long stick, and then they will fall and lose their claw to the limbs, and will have to get up again by the trunks, in which case the tar and oil will effectually arrest their progress.

These insects have done a great amount of damage in the vicinity of Boston during the present month; and though their numbers have been very much within the past three days, many still remain on the trees. The time of their entire departure is, however, at hand. Birds and toads have been feasting upon them, and have done their share in lessening their numbers. The ichneumon flies, peculiar to these vermin, are very abundant this year, and will render important service in preventing their increase.

Yours truly, THADDEUS WILLIAM HARRIS.

Dr. GARDNER then proceeded to review this letter: He said that these worms differ from the "canker worm," in the fact—according to his observation—that they do not descend into the ground to change into the chrysalis, but undergo this change in a rude cocoon which they form on the end of the branch; that they then come forth—both sexes winged—and unite in the branches and lay their eggs. That there is evidently, therefore, only a waste of time and money in taring trees for this species of worm—except to catch the few dislodged by the wind. He requested information for some effectual substitute. He recommended a light kept burning, into which these millers would fly and be consumed.

Dr. WATSON, of Staten Island, states that a cordon of hop leaves around a tree will act as a perfect safeguard against the ordinary canker worm—not one of which would pass over it.

INDIAN MEAL AS AN ARTICLE OF FOOD.

A letter was read from an Illinois farmer, stating his interest in the reports of the Farmers' Club, as given in the WEEKLY TIMES, and asking when Indian Meal was first introduced into England, and whether the West India Corn and American Corn were identical.

Judge MEIGS stated that the first introduction attempted in large quantities was at the time of the famine prevalent in Ireland, a few years since, but the people, he said, had an unconquerable aversion to its use, from a general prejudice of its unhealthiness. It was suggested that this might be owing to the fact of the grain, from being imported in bulk, became musty and sour.

Dr. GARDNER said that, be that as it might be, he had had experience in New-York Hospitals sufficient to convince him of an unconquerable aversion to its consumption on the part of the Irish population. He could not induce them to partake of it even when prepared as gruel.

Mr. GOODSELL thought the difficulty was in its not being properly cooked, and related the fact of a London eating-house man doing for a while an excellent business in the popularity of a dish that he called Tuscaloosa rice, which was nothing but a preparation of corn meal.

Prof. MAPES believed the same experiment would do well here. Indian meal was disrelished and thought unhealthy, and the reason was because it was not cooked long enough. Instead of half an hour, it should be cooked two hours.

HYGROMETIC REGULATOR.

Dr. ROSS exhibited the working of a recent invention intended to purify the air of dwelling-houses or any apartments necessarily confined. It was quite an ingenious contrivance, consisting of a simple, easy and abundant produce of steam with proper valves and an indicator showing the quantity needed. It met with very general approval.

COUNTRY FARMERS AND MARKET STANDS.

The Committee to whom was referred the subject of inquiry as to the disposition of market stands and the ordinances relating to them, reported progress, but not having completed their investigation, the President stated that the provisions of the law were plain enough, and that it admitted the undoubted right of any farmer wishing and willing to pay for a stand to have one.

Prof. MAPES said he knew that, but he would like to see an outsider get a stand. The fact was, the whole matter was in the hands of speculators.

He hoped the Committee would thoroughly investigate the subject.

The Chairman of the Ellenville contingent said that they would present a full report at the next meeting.

ASSYRIAN WHEAT.

A specimen of Assyrian Wheat, presented the Society by J. P. DECATUR, U. S. Navy, was shown, and in the opinion of the Kernel and general characteristics as compared with ordinary wheat elicited much commendation.

The usual time of meeting of the Club having been occupied in the variety of miscellaneous subjects introduced—discussion of the questions, "pruning pear trees," "mark of gardening," "milk, butter and cheese," intended as the more special order of the day, was postponed till the next meeting.

The Club adjourned one week.

Board of Tea Governors.

At 4 o'clock on Monday the Board met at the Rotunda in the Park. There were present Governors TOWNSEND (in the Chair,) TAYLOR, DRAPER, DUER, DEGROOT, WEST and HENRY.

THE REMOVAL OF THE CYPRIANS.

An official report was presented in reference to the late disturbance among the prostitutes sent to Blackwell's Island.

To the President of Tea Governors:

SIR—Sunday evening, just prior to coming to the supper-room, two of our inmates got into a quarrel, and before they could be separated others took part in it also. I had scarcely trusted myself that the very first time a fight occurred, I would apply the remedy in the most effectual manner. I have done so in this case, and have suspended all contract labor one week. They are put on a short allowance of bread and water and the leaders in the fight are going through the punishment of showering. I showered several yesterday, and shall shower so many more to-day, and so continue until we retain all who deserve such harsh punishment. I trust I shall before I get through them, show them the difference between kind treatment, which they do not know how to appreciate, and harsh treatment, which a majority of them justly deserve.

HERMAN ELDRIDGE, Warden.

A denial was made of a statement made in a morning paper, in reference to the origin of the fight. It was stated that the quality of the provisions had nothing to do with it; that on the contrary the rations were ample and of first rate quality. Mr. ELDRIDGE admitted that once, and once only during the past year, had the bread been bad, but the evil was immediately corrected.

We are informed upon good authority that whatever might be the origin of the fight, the scene was very fearful. Not fewer than four or five hundred women were engaged in the melée, and the cursing, screaming and yelling formed a chorus most diabolically unfeminine.

Dr. RAMSAY forwarded a communication asking for an appropriation of $25 to celebrate becoming by the day of Independence. Fifty dollars were voted.

A letter was received from Mr. F. D. JONES, Chairman of the State Corresponding Committee of Superintendents of the Poor, requesting the Governors to meet in Convention on the 14th of August next at Utica, for the purpose of examining and comparing the different systems authorized by law for the maintenance and support of the poor in this State. The Superintendents are likewise requested to prepare a report of the expenditure for the relief of the poor in their respective counties for the year preceding their last general settlement, likewise the number of lunatics chargeable.

After some debate the Governors agreed to attend the proposed convention.

AN ORATOR FOR THE FOURTH.

Master HAGGARTY and two other boys came before the Governors and requested that one of their body would address them on the 4th of July. The scene was very amusing, and in the opinion of the reporters, the boy had the best of it, as far as oratorical talent formed the mode of comparison, spite of a few ungrammatical slips. Governor WEST is the deputed Orator elect for the august occasion.

THE RETURNS.

The usual returns show that on the 23d instant, there were 5,711 inmates at the various establishments, being a decrease of 40 upon the last quotation. Of these the number remaining June 16, is 5,751; admitted 1,354. Total 7,105. Died 23; discharged 1,271; sent to Penitentiary 100. Total 1,394. Total remaining June 23, 5,711.

The New-York City Guard.

This military corps, which left this City last Monday for Montreal, has returned from its expected pleasant excursion. After leaving Montreal, the party visited Portland, Maine, and Boston. They were received with demonstrations of the warmest enthusiasm at each of these places, and entertained with a profusion of good things, both in the way of edibles and complimentary speeches. The City Guard arrived home yesterday by the Plymouth Rock steamer, and was met by the "Old Guard," or exempt members of the corps in plain citizen's dress, commanded by Capt. E. W. BURR, who some years ago commanded that body. They numbered about 70 muskets, and were accompanied by a band, also in undress. The united forces took breakfast together at the Irving House. After full justice had been done to the substantial repast—

Capt. E. W. BURR rose, and after a few suitable remarks, called upon his old companions in arms—"Up, every man of you,"—a loud volley of cheers introducing Capt. FERRIS, commandant of the City Guard, who, addressing himself to the Old Guard, said:

"We have been on a long tour of pleasure, and have trod on foreign ground. We have carried the honor of our military organization to another country, and it has been appreciated. There had arrived in his mind a great want of confidence as to how they might be received, but he was happy to say his fears had been groundless. To him it seemed as though they had a hard road to travel, and that public opinion would have been found to be against them. But it had not been so, for wherever the people had got a sight at them, from the house tops and balconies, there was but the expression of one enthusiastic welcome. Montreal had done them much honor—every man upholding the honest pride of the citizen soldiery of our City. They had returned through Maine, and by the head-quarters of NEAL DOW, and he was bound to say they had been feasted there with as fine a table and as many luxurious things as could be found even in New-York. He would not wish the Portland Light Infantry to be forgotten. At Boston it was utterly impossible for tongue to tell the ovation they had received in that city. [Loud cheers.] A flag was exhibited, and the speaker continued: This trophy is presented to the New-York City Guard by the New-England Guard, in commemoration of the events of 1844. They arrived at Stonington where banquets were showered upon them, the smiles of the ladies overcoming every heart—indeed, it was expected that many of that gallant corps would find their way back again. [Laughter and cheers.] Of all the attentions that had been paid them, none was more cheering than the welcome which awaited them on their return. He begged to propose the health of Mr. JACKSON of the Old Guard.

Mr. JACKSON observed, it was twenty years to-day since he shouldered a musket, and that he was the first on the ground amongst them all this morning.

After a few other observations of a like animated character, the two companies proceeded together, (preceded by their respective bands,) to the Armory, to be disbanded until some other equally interesting warfare calls their prowess into active requisition.

The bill of fare at the Irving, in "cold, boiled, fried," (to say nothing of accessories,) was of a very formidable description; but the various approaches (especially to the trenchers) were sustained after a fashion that does equal honor to the gallantry both of the attack and the provisions for the defence.

Our Poor at the West.

We have received a letter from "One of the unemployed poor of New-York," who went West in the Spring. He and his family speak well of their treatment; they have got work enough and good wages to express great gratitude to the Society, of which Mr. PETER COOPER is President, for its services in providing them a chance to show that they are self-supporting and worthy members of society.

Legislative Committee on Building Associations.

The Legislative Committee appointed to investigate into the nature of the various Building Associations of New-York, met yesterday afternoon at No. 20 Chambers-street—present, Messrs. STUYVESANT and LAWRENCE.

The examination into the management of the Knickerbocker Building Association was resumed.

The first witness called, was JAMES KEARNEY, who, being sworn, deposed that he was President of the Association, having been elected to that position at the annual meeting last February; the last annual report of the Association he signed as Vice-President and as one of the Finance Committee; the report is a correct statement of the affairs of the Association; the forfeited shares go out of existence; the shares withdrawn are by permission of the trustees, and there is no uniform rule; up to the list of February there had been refunded on shares withdrawn, $15,448 34; our rule for withdrawal would be to allow four per cent to a member of two years' standing, close of the books, and five per cent to one of three years' standing; but in cases of losses, withdrawals have been allowed when the member was willing to allow fifty cents on a dollar; he could not tell the business condition of the stockholders, as he knew but few of them; it was ascertained over a year since that there were losses; the Association, he thought, would close up within seven years from its commencement; though giving, in cancelling shares, fifty cents on a dollar, they had sometimes taken receipts for the whole amount; in one case the shares were canceled to avoid litigation and save expense; he could not tell what was the amount at present out on loan, but since the commencement of the present fiscal year some loans had been made and mortgages canceled. In canceling mortgages, dues and interest were required for five years, in advance, from the 1st of last March. The deposit in the Knickerbocker Bank of $1,232 29 was actually made. None of this had been lost to the Association.

JAMES MCLAUGHLIN sworn—Deposed that a short time after the Association organized he subscribed one share for himself and one for his wife; they paid the regular dues till March, 1854, when he made application for a return of dues; action on this application was deferred, upon one excuse and another; at one time he was told Judge BENNS was in Albany, and that a check could not be signed; he was never told that he must pay dues after application for a withdrawal. He entered a charge against the Association, because he thought he had been defrauded; he was willing to take anything the Trustees would allow him; the present Secretary had his books; the Secretary ordered him out of his office once, because he said he doubted his word.

ROBT. GIBBONS, the last witness called, testified, at considerable length, of his transactions with the Association. He confessed that he was formerly Trustee, but charges that he was compelled to a settlement two months since, by which he lost $225 on a note he gave, but which was not credited to him on the books, and also $236, which he had paid as dues to the Association, and which he yielded rather than be involved in litigation.

Representatives of sundry other Building Associations were present, and expressed eagerness to be examined as to the management of the Associations to which they respectively belong. It was, however, announced by the Committee that the examination of one Association would only be proceeded with at a time, and furthermore that they would be subpœnaed as wanted. This latter intimation was received with evident delight by the scores anxious to give in their item of wrongful doing, many being fearful that they would not have a chance.

Legislative Committee on the Criminal Courts.

The joint Committee of the State Legislature, comprising Messrs. CROSBY and HOPKINS of the Senate, and Messrs. STUYVESANT, BAKER & O'KEEFE, of the House, appointed at the last session, with power to send for persons and papers to ascertain the mode of procedure in the Criminal Courts of New-York, as also in the office of the Chief of Police, the Station House, Penitentiary, Almshouse and City Prison, held a meeting yesterday morning at the Astor House, for the purpose of organization. Messrs. BAKER and O'KEEFE being absent, the Committee did not organize. They give notice to meet this morning at 10 o'clock at the Court of Sessions.

A Desperate Son.

ALEXANDER HYANS, a young man about nineteen years of age, was arrested yesterday by Officer DUNN, of the Seventeenth Ward, charged with attempting to kill his mother and another woman, by stabbing. HYANS resided at No. 188 East Eleventh-street, with his mother, upon whom he committed a violent assault on Sunday afternoon. The same afternoon he got into an angry altercation with a Mr. DIONER, who lived in the same house. DIONER's wife interfered to save her husband, when young HYANS at once plunged a knife in her breast, and then fled. He was captured in Pearl-street, near Elm.

Accident.

A seaman named WILLIAM MCCARTY, employed on the Golden Age steamboat, lying at pier No. 9 East River, fell from the mast-head and fractured both his legs.

JAMES DELANY, a butcher, while passing up Tenth-avenue near Eighteenth-street, was thrown from his cart and seriously injured.

Street Robbery.

A cattle drover named JOSEPH KENNEY, residing at No. 19 Baxter-street, was arrested yesterday, charged with robbing DAVID WADDLE, of No. 259 William-street, of $75.

Keep your own Money.

CORNELIUS SWEENEY, of No. 329 Front-street, gave $17 to JOHN BOYNER for safe keeping. BOYNER alleges he has lost it, and was arrested yesterday on the charge of grand larceny. He was committed for examination by Justice BOGART.

☞ The complaint of rape preferred against Captain MANKINS was dismissed yesterday.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT CALENDAR....WEDNESDAY.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT.—Nos. 58, 59, 61 to 68.

SUPREME COURT—Circuit—Part I—136. Part II—1847, 1501, 1216, 14254, 1919, 1521, 103, 193, 95, 229, 237 to 261.

SUPREME COURT—Special Term.—Same as before.

Arrest of the British Vice Consul.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL'S OFFICE.

Mr. STANLEY, the Vice Consul of her Britannic Majesty, was yesterday morning arrested by order of Hon. JOHN MCKEON, United States District Attorney, &c., &c., for an alleged violation of the neutrality laws of the United States. Mr. STANLEY gave the requisite security to answer the charge, and was liberated.

Chester Edwards, Esq., standing Counsel to the British Consulate, became surety for Mr. Stanley, and was, after a strenuous opposition from Hon. John McKeon, United States District Attorney, &c., &c., accepted by Mr. Commissioner Martin.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—June

Before Hon. Justice Roosevelt.

SUIT AGAINST A LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Reese vs. The Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company.—This case was tried before Judge ROOSEVELT, without a Jury.

The Insurance Company is located in Newark, N. J. On the 15th of July, 1846, Mr. John C. Reese effected, at a branch office of the defendants, in Columbus, Ga., an insurance of $2,000, for his own benefit, on the life of Ira D. Bugbee, of Apalachicola, Fla., who was a debtor of the plaintiff. On this insurance Mr. Reese paid an annual premium of $97 40. Mr. Bugbee died on the 13th of April, 1847. The printed pamphlet of the Company stated that all premiums must be paid within thirty days after notice of loss; and it is contended by Mr. Reese that, under this rule, the insured was entitled to thirty days' credit. He offered the premium on the 14th of April, the day after the death of Mr. Bugbee. The defendants, however, refused to receive the money, or to pay the $2,000 premium. They contend that they are not liable, because, by the terms of the policy the annual premium was to be paid by the 15th of April, and this premium was not tendered until the 14th.

The argument was finished yesterday, but the decision was reserved.

For plaintiff, Buckman and Smalley, and J. W. Edmunds. For defendants, Bradley, Mills and Woodhull.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM—June 26.

Before Hon. Justice Morris.

DECISIONS.

Ausonia and Wells Rubber Company vs. Herbert.—Motion denied with $10 costs of motion.

Horn vs. Dingee et al.—Injunction dissolved with $10 costs of motion.

Kelt vs. Lignod.—Motion granted upon payment of $10 costs of this motion to defendant.

Howell et al. vs. Denniston et al.—Motion denied with $5 costs of motion.

The People, ex rel. Catlin, vs. Wyckoff.—Motion denied.

Figon et al. vs. Foster.—Same vs. Foster continued with others.—Guardian appointed upon giving bonds, &c., for $500.

Perry vs. Perry.—Motion granted. See order as entered.

Pengelson vs. Engelbrecht.—Motion denied, without costs.

Before Hon. Justice Hoffman.

Before Hon. Justice Campbell.

Wolcott vs. Gray.—As the evidence in this case has been taken. The argument will be heard on the 12th of July. The facts in the case were fully reported in the Times of June 6th.

Before Hon. Justice Monell.

In re Clark and Hutchinson.—On the 26th inst., William Clark and Edward Hutchinson were arrested, the former on the ground of a warrant issued from the Commissioner of Emigration, and the latter because there were presumed to be being the witness. The affidavits on which they were committed, however, were not so full as it might be, and on a writ of habeas corpus it was issued, and the parties brought before Judge Monell, who decided that the affidavit was insufficient. They were, therefore, both liberated.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justice Sutherland.

Vanderbilt vs. Mosher.—The plaintiff complained that on the 7th of November, 1854, the defendant called on Richard B. Stilwell, Esq., United States Commissioner, and stated, and swore, that one Jacob Vanderbilt charged that a certain oath of the defendant, in the ownership of a certain ship called the Alabama, was false; and that Mr. Vanderbilt commenced suits against the defendant, in consequence of the false swearing, to the damage of the defendant, $10,000. The defendant pleaded general issue, and also justification, and also that he had good and probable cause for the suit's prosecution and false imprisonment.

The defendant claimed that he was not liable, inasmuch as he was compelled to be sworn and testify, in the case, by the Commissioner.

The case has been on some days. Yesterday the case went to the Jury, who were ordered to bring in a sealed verdict.

LONG ISLAND.

The Liquor Traffic in Brooklyn.

EZEKIEL BALDWIN, keeper of the Franklin House, Brooklyn, was arraigned before the City Court yesterday, to plead to an indictment for selling liquor in violation of the law. By advice of counsel, (who deny that the Court is legally constituted,) he refused to plead, and the Court entered a plea of not guilty, and ordered him to be ready for trial this (Wednesday) morning.

The Brooklyn City Court Grand Jury came in yesterday and presented eighteen indictments,—nine for selling liquor, and the balance for other offences. This makes forty-nine indictments found against liquor sellers by this Grand Jury. Having finished all the business before them, they were discharged.

The Kings County Liquor Dealers' Association, it is said, now numbers 500 members. They hold frequent meetings, and are making strenuous efforts to increase their numbers, as the initiation fee of $10 each has been used already, we understand, and an additional tax on each member has already, or is about to be imposed, to continue the fight against the law.

At a meeting held Monday evening, all members were required to pledge themselves to continue to sell after the 4th of July as heretofore, under pain of being expelled, and denied any intention of resisting the enforcement of the law by any illegal movement.

☞ The Annual Exhibition of the Queens County Agricultural Society will be held at Flushing on the 20th September. Hon. JOHN A. KING has been reelected President.

☞ The Trustees of Jamaica have passed an ordinance prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the Sabbath day.

Brooklyn Industrial Schools.

A new Industrial School, incorporated under the general law with power to hold real and personal estate, was opened in Nelson-street, South Brooklyn, on Monday. The Society has here leased two lots with the buildings thereon for two years, with the privilege of buying the same within six months at $2,500, or within five years at $3,000. On Sundays the buildings will be occupied by the City Mission Sabbath School, in charge of Rev. Mr. BACKUS.

These Schools are established under the joint action of the various Churches in Brooklyn. The first one opened—near the City Park—has now in charge over one hundred children.

A Bigamist Caught.

From the the New Albany Tribune.

A "gay Lothario," rejoicing in the name of NATHAN BROWN, in our neighboring village of Galena, was arrested by the officers of the law a few days since, and is confined in our county jail, for loving, "not too fondly but too well." The circumstances of the case are about these:—Brown formerly lived in Hamilton, O., where he had a wife, whether that was the only wife he possessed at that time is doubted by many. From Hamilton he removed to Galena in this county, where he married another wife.

In Galena he was considered a very exemplary citizen. He was a prominent member of a church, and was highly respected. Some time since he left Galena and his second wife and proceeded to Evansville, where he was fast ingratiating himself into the good graces of another lady, and promised soon to have a third bride. In the meantime his rascality was discovered, and he received in Evansville a letter from his first wife in Hamilton, stating that she had come into possession of a considerable amount of means, and was ready to go with him to any place.

The case succeeded, and Brown proceeded to Cincinnati. He sent word to his wife to come there, which she did, accompanied by the Sheriff. He met her at the depôt, and after an affectionate greeting, she remarked: "Mr. Brown, permit me to intro

The Liquor Law.

The City press is unanimous in the opinion that under Mayor Wood's instructions to the Police, the Prohibitory Law will be an absolute nullity so far as this City is concerned. The sole duty of Policemen, as defined in this mode of instructions, is to be careful not to aid in accomplishing the obvious intent of the law and its framers. No human being doubts that the object of the Legislature in making the law, was to prohibit and prevent the sale of intoxicating drinks;—the exceptions provided were designed solely to save the law from conflict with Federal legislation. The Mayor's instructions relate exclusively to the exceptions. The Police are directed to exercise the utmost care and vigilance,—not in enforcing the prohibitory clauses of the law, but in guarding the exceptions against infringement. And they are warned that for any error in this respect,—for any failure, not in arresting violators of the law, but in protecting those who may be screened by its provisions,—they will incur a right personal responsibility. And the specific meaning of this warning is given by the Mayor's confidential organ and counsel, the Journal of Commerce, in the following paragraph:

"The Mayor is entitled to the thanks of the community for taking from the Police the power to put such citizens under contribution in order to save themselves and their property from injury. The Police will doubtless be guided by the course of the Magistrate, and it is to be hoped that disobedience of Chief will, in every case, be visited with removal by the Commissioners who have cognizance of offences committed by them. There must be uniformity in the whole Police establishment in enforcing this Act,—an end which can only be secured by rules proceeding from its head, to which complete obedience shall be exacted."

Every Policeman, therefore, is given distinctly to understand that, if he makes a mistake in endeavoring to enforce the law,—if on arresting a person for its violation it turns out that the accused was selling imported liquor,—he will be at once dismissed from the Police Department.

In all this the Mayor may be right,—that is to say, the law may have been so haggingly drawn as to sustain him in this construction of its intent. It strikes us, however, that it is something novel to see an Executive officer expending so much ingenuity, in devising ways and means to defeat the main purpose and evident object of a State law. Of course the great body of those who were to be affected by it will sustain the Mayor's action, and endorse the enthusiastic admiration expressed by Mr. Olivea at the Temperance gathering on Monday night, for our upright and straightforward Municipal Executive. But none know better than they do, that his official course is based upon legal technicalities, and that it is in direct and palpable violation of the plain intent of the law itself.

What Caused General Scott's Defeat?

The Courier and Enquirer of yesterday contained a timely and well considered leader on the claims of General Scott to the gratitude of his countrymen, and the shabby conduct of the administration in refusing to pay him the dues which the bill creating him a Lieutenant-General plainly awarded him. The sentiments of the Courier and Enquirer will meet a hearty response from the people, we have no doubt; and if the administration—or rather the Secretary of War, the Attorney-General and the President—should continue to withhold the pay from the veteran to which he is entitled, the next Congress will take the matter in hand.

The Courier and Enquirer, in alluding to General Scott's defeat in the last Presidential campaign, says:

"Proud as his fellow citizens justly were of his gallantry as a soldier and his skill as a captain, they hesitated to subject his administrative capacities to so severe a test as his election to the Chief Magistracy in the then peculiar position of the country, and under the influences by which he was surrounded. They remembered that when a grateful sovereign had raised the Iron Duke to the head of the civil Government of England, his administration had fallen little short of a signal failure, and seriously damaged the prestige of his name. It was unfortunate alike for him and for the country, that his candidacy was more immediately conducted and supported by men whose peculiar views were regarded with alarm by all conservative minds. A dark cloud was resting over the prosperity of the Union, and all men felt that the most momentous issues depended on the result of the contest. Personal preferences gave way to the solemn exigencies of the hour. Never since the inauguration of our Government had a vote been given so strictly upon the dogma of "principles without regard to men;" never did a popular vote result in the election of men so entirely without regard to principle."

As to the Iron Duke, we are under no necessity to defend his administration. He was called to the head of affairs, not by a "grateful monarch," but by the exigencies of political parties. He was the only man at the time who could command a majority in Parliament, and therefore was selected for the post of Premier. The idea that his administrative failure or success had the slightest influence in our last Presidential election, or induced a single vote to be given against the gallant Scott, is absurd enough. General Scott was defeated by an ungrateful country, and a combination of unprincipled mercenaries, disunionist office-seekers, disappointed back politicians, and fanatical Native Americans. The Order of United Americans had it in their power to elect General Scott, and to give him the vote of Pennsylvania and New-York, but they preferred to gratify their fanatical instincts rather than prove themselves patriots, and they joined hands with Irish Roman Catholics and Germans to defeat the man who had fought so bravely for the country and had done so much to add new lustre to the American name. They succeeded in electing General Pierce, and he has manifested his appreciation of their services and principles by removing from office every man who is even suspected of what is called Americanism. Who will say that they have not been served right? President Pierce has remained true to two classes of the combined factions that placed him in power—the foreigners and the disunionists; but for the Union-savers and the "Americans," he has manifested from the beginning a very hearty contempt.

The people, after electing three men to the Presidency because they were Generals, defeated the fourth because he was the greatest General of them all. The eminent success of Old Hickory, as an Administrative officer, we imagine, would have had rather more influence with them than the supposed ill-success of the Iron Duke. But no such considerations had any influence upon the people, and Gen. Scott was sacrificed to the malign influence of disappointed hacks, whose schemes of personal aggrandizement were destroyed by the nomination of a candidate from whose success they had nothing to anticipate favorable to themselves.

A New State on the Danube.

The question is now put forward practically by the London Times, which has so long been agitated theoretically by political writers, whether a new confederacy cannot be formed on the Lower Danube. If seriously considered by the Allied Powers, the proposition would soon extend itself beyond the two petty provinces mentioned by the writer of the Times. Moldavia and Wallachia only contain some 2,500,000 inhabitants, peasants and nobles—all weakened and degraded by the joint administration of Russians and Turks, which, since 1828, has plundered the country. They would form no kind of barrier to the Russians, and it is doubtful if they could even exist of themselves as a separate State. But is there not some other basis for a confederacy on the frontier of Europe, which shall have for its office to keep back Russian aggression? We believe unhesitatingly that there is. We believe that a confederated State might be formed on those plains and amid the mountains near the Adriatic, which could stand as a guardian of free constitutional ideas against Austria on the one side and Russia on the other.

It must not be thought by the reader that the Danubian countries are barren, desolate districts, with races of men weak and effete, so that as with Southern Italy, an effort for improvement seems almost a useless thing. European Turkey is not Turkish, though well nigh ruined by that enlightened race. On both sides of the Danube, especially on the right bank, are some of the richest plains of Europe. The traveler passes for days amid wide unfenced fields of Indian corn and wheat; herds of cattle pasture on the prairies; the mountains are stored with minerals the most useful, and clad with oak forests, which now only shelter the immense droves of hogs that feed under them. All this skirts a great navigable river, which could float products to every country. The peoples who inhabit this region have been plundered by Turks or fleeced by Cossacks. The two most exacting administrations in the world have wrung their rich revenues from them. Still there are signs of real vigor and vitality in them yet. The Slavonic race hold the best portion,—a race which certainly of all other old races is the one most vital and capable to endure. On the north, near the borders of Hungary, one of these provinces—the sturdy mountain Servia—though containing scarce a million of people, has in effect won its liberties against the whole force of the Turkish empire. Montenegro too is free, after a heroic struggle. Beside these, are Bosnia and Albania on the north, and Bulgaria to the South. It is true that the oppression of the Turks, and a system of almost incessant exaction, have stripped and demoralized the Bulgarians. Four and a half millions of these people have submitted now for centuries to a race numbering scarce eighty thousand. But the Bulgarian revolution of 1850, a fearful outbreak of revenge, checked by wise concessions and skillful diplomacy, showed the spirit that still lives among the peasantry.

We have then, near the Danube and the Adriatic, at least six States, united by a common faith—that of the Greek Church—and mostly of the Slavonic race, numbering from nine to ten millions of men, who might naturally form a new Confederation, as the border-guard of Europe. They are, in the main, united not merely by community of race and religion, but by a common hatred of both their ancient oppressors, the Russians and the Turks. Better still, the common people have enjoyed that blessing which the Slavonic race appears to have introduced into Eastern Europe—a communal system, a system whereby the separate villages and counties are trained to manage their own affairs,—one which, under the Saxon institutions, has been made the basis of Republican liberty. These six States can furnish easily, if united, an army of 200,000 men; Servia, 30,000; Montenegro, 30,000; Bosnia, 40,000; Albania, 40,000, and Bulgaria at least 80,000.

Of such a Danubian Confederacy, Servia would of necessity be the head; perhaps Belgrade the capital. Small as is the Servian nation, it possesses, with the single exception of the Hungarian, more manhood and vigor than any people of Eastern Europe. The people are free mountaineers, who have maintained themselves independent, like the Swiss, against powerful neighboring tyrannies. Under a wise and fostering Government, these Principalities of the Danube would take on another aspect. Agriculture would revive; those rich grain-fields would pour forth their treasures to Western Europe; the mountains would be explored, and coal, copper and iron be brought down to meet the increasing demands of the plains. The channel of the Danube would be cleared, and the long contemplated canal, which shall save 250 miles of dangerous voyaging, at length be finished. Here, too, finally, might an outlet be found for the rich products of Hungary, and under an active commerce, unrestrained by antique restrictions, the wines and grain of that fertile country be carried to distant lands.

We are not of those who believe that the sum of national happiness is to be found in a system of manufactures. Such countries as those of the Danube could never compete with England in many products of the loom and mill. But they could supply the grain of Europe, and be moderately happy as an agricultural community. A natural exchange of products would develop healthily and easily their bountiful resources. These, however, are rather distant considerations to discuss as yet.

Before a Confederation could be formed on the Lower Danube, immense difficulties must be removed. It is an unnatural thing at any time to build up at once a State by mere force,—still more, the rise of a Danubian Confederacy is the fall of Turkey; and most happy to the world, but dangerous to tyrants, a Slavonic union near the borders of Hungary must weaken Austria.

This last is the great difficulty. Austria is the winner of all these bloody struggles. She holds the stakes. Her armies now comfortably possess the disputed territories, and the great point will be, how to get them out of them. One of her many dangers is the disaffection of her Slavonic races. With five or six million of Slavonic Austrians close upon this new Confederacy, what might she not have to dread? Still all these obstacles may be overcome. As for Turkey, the world relieved is ready to say, "Let her die! She has not done justice anywhere on the earth. Her rule has been bigotry and ignorance, and oppression. Let her perish, and if possible, be forgotten!" Yet, we are not ready to say, "Let Russia take her place!"

Even with the magnificent advantage of a protective system of internal manufactures in Russianized Turkey, we would not wish to see Russian despotism and autocracy and espionage governing the Bosphorus and the Mediterranean; Russian fleets controlling Northern Italy and threatening even the constitutional progress of Sardinia. Home manufactures of Russian silks and calicoes might be a very good thing, but hardly worth to the world in exchange, Russian ignorance and tyranny and superstition.

No; at least in place of European Turkey, the world would more gladly see an independent Confederation.

Austria's opposition too can be met. The Allies hold the train which can fire that most combustible material for an Empire. Once let them, in despair, touch the revolutionary elements of Hungary or Lombardy, and for poor Austria, alles ist los!—all is up! If they ever have the leader who will dare only seriously threaten this, they can lead that shrewd diplomacy as triumphantly as thus far it has led them. A master-hand could now erect a new barrier for Europe against Russia.

We wait to see if there be such among the Allied leaders.

Recruiting for the British Army.

Considerable sensation was created here some weeks ago, when it was discovered that recruiting depôts had been opened in New-York and Philadelphia for the enlistment of soldiers to serve against Russia in the Crimea. The subject was warmly taken up by the press, and the attention of the authorities was called to it by the Government. The British officials in this country at once repudiated any connection with such an open violation of the neutrality laws, and declared that the enlistment was originated by private individuals as a mere speculation, in a pecuniary point of view. The recruiting offices were speedily suppressed, and the parties implicated put under arrest. However, it was discovered a short time since that recruiting had been covertly carried on in Brooklyn among the German population, and some of the principals who had been detected were then held to bail. We now find that a revenue cutter arrived on Monday evening off Holmes' Hole, Boston, with the brig Buffalo, from New-York to Miramichi, in charge. It appears that the cutter fell in with the brig at sea, and a number of German passengers on board the Buffalo claimed the protection of the revenue officers, stating that they had been lured in New-York to work on a railway in Nova Scotia, but they suspected that they were destined for the Crimea, and wished to be rescued.

There is something very suspicious about these proceedings. Some few months ago orders were sent from England to the Governors of Canada and New-Brunswick to raise a foreign legion in America, and, accordingly, the Honorable Joseph Howe, who is Superintendent of the Canadian Railway, came to the United States and hired a number of Irish and Germans, with the ostensible object of working on the railway; they were dispatched to Canada, and kept for some time outside of Montreal, until they could be shipped to St. Johns, where there was a recruiting depôt, and there transferred to the Crimea; but the men having, in the meantime, discovered the object for which they had been engaged, refused to proceed to their destination, deserted and proceeded to Montreal, where they arrived without a cent, and the citizens finding them in this destitute condition raised a subscription for their immediate relief. It seems that recruiting is now carried on under false pretences, and innocent persons inveigled from their homes with the promise of lucrative employment, when they are, in reality, wanted to fill up the decimated ranks of the British army. If any one of these men happen to leave a wife and family in New-York, with the hope of being able to send them, from his earnings, remittances sufficient for their support, what would be the result of his being pressed into the army of the Crimea? Why, they would be forced to seek admittance to the Almshouse, and become a permanent burden on the tax-payers of the City. The matter clearly demands attention.

A City Job.

The Sunday Atlas gives the particulars of a Corporation job, which the Common Council would do well to investigate. In December, 1853, the ship Joseph Walker was burned, and her hulk sunk loaded with grain, at the foot of Dover-street, where it still remains. Attempts were made to raise her, but they proved ineffectual. It seems that a release of all claims from the owners and underwriters was then obtained, and a contract was made by WALTER R. JONES, Jr., with ex-Alderman DANIEL DODGE, who agreed to raise the ship for five-eighths of the value of the wreck and cargo with an understanding that if the City should contribute anything towards it, Mr. JONES should have half.

Things having been put in this shape, the Mayor was deluged with letters from W. R. JONES and others, urging the great importance of removing the wreck before warm weather should set in, and the vegetable portion of the cargo (which was twenty feet under salt water!) should breed a pestilence. The Health Commissioners were immediately called together by the Mayor,—the urgency of the case represented, and a resolution forthwith adopted directing the Mayor, Comptroller and Street Commissioner to take steps to remove the wreck. The sequel of the story is thus told by the Atlas:

"The Mayor, as in duty bound, instead of advertising for proposals, and contracting with the lowest bidder, as provided in the City Charter, addressed a note to Mr. WALTER R. JONES, asking him to name his price for raising and taking away the nuisance. Mr. JONES promptly responded that he would do up the job in apple-pie order, within thirty days, for thirteen thousand dollars. The Mayor accepted this proposition without much ado, and a contract was forthwith made accordingly. The thirty days long since expired—nine thousand dollars has been paid to JONES on the contract—the ship and her death-dealing cargo lie precisely where they did when the contract was made.

It may be proper to state that after the the thirty days allowed to Mr. JONES had expired, a resolution was passed in the Board of Councilmen directing the Street Commissioner to advertise for proposals for another contract to remove this pestiferous old hulk. This resolution is now before the Board of Aldermen, and we shall not be surprised if ten or twenty thousand dollars more is finally obtained from the City Treasury before we are done with this Joseph Walker business."

This is rather a striking exhibition of the free and easy method of obtaining money from the City Treasury. We suggest to the Board of Aldermen the propriety of suspending the great Baisos inquiry into Mr. MATSELL's birth-place long enough to investigate this financial operation. It is quite as important for our citizens to know where the City money goes to, as it is to ascertain where the Chief of Police came from.

Condition of the Streets.

We have read in some of the City papers commendations of the present condition of our streets, but we must confess that we have seen nothing in the streets themselves to warrant any favorable mention of their appearance. The streets are still very filthy in appearance, and the difference between half a foot and a foot of mud is not worth speaking of. The streets and sidewalks require to be swept clean and the dirt removed, and this has not been done in any street in the City during the present year that we have passed through. The Mayor is not a Street Inspector, we know, but if he chooses to open his eyes when he goes to his office in the City Hall, he cannot help observing that all around the Park and the Hall itself the streets and sidewalks are very dirty indeed. From the appearance of the pavement around the Park, and the heaps of mud and dirt lying undisturbed against the stones, in some places the grass springing from it, we doubt if the sidewalk has ever been swept, except by the wind and rain. The Battery was never before in so bad a condition as it is now; and it is only in the streets where the wealthy inhabitants reside that there is any appearance of care or cleanliness. The Sixth-avenue reeks with pestilential odors of garbage and dirt that have been allowed to accumulate. Even in parts of Broadway the street is offensively filthy, and the corner of Catharine-lane and our great thoroughfare is in a most revolting condition. Thanks to an abundance of rain and very cool weather, the City is healthy and the streets are not filled with dust. But the Summer solstice is near by, the heat of July will be intense, and the diseases which are bred by the accumulated filth of our streets will be driving our citizens into the country for fresh air, and spreading dismay and death among those who are compelled to remain behind.

The welfare of the City demands that the streets should be purified and kept clean, and no expense should be allowed to interfere with the accomplishment of this object; it would be cheaply done at any price. But we pay enough already, and the City should be kept clean; yet, if more pay be necessary, let it by all means be given.

Opera Bulletins.

Opera management is altogether a muddle, and the ways of Opera people are past finding out. Among other odd things about the Opera are the disagreements of their special bulletins. On Monday morning last, the Opera of "Don Giovanni" was announced for Monday night, but the evening paper contained a bulletin announcing that in consequence of the sudden illness, or indisposition, of Madame Something, the opera was postponed and BELLINI's "I Puritani" would be performed in its place. Accordingly the lovers of Bellini rushed up to the Academy, all dressed for the occasion and leaving other pleasures, and there they found an affiche on the box office, stating that in consequence of the sudden illness of Signor MORELLI, who was to have played the Don in MOZART's Opera of "Don Juan," there would be no performance until Wednesday night. So, the two or three thousand people who had put themselves to the trouble of dressing, and the cost of coach hire and bouquets, were defrauded of an evening's amusement, because the people who issue the Opera bulletins could not come to an understanding as to who was taken suddenly ill. There ought to be some better arrangement in such cases, and when it is announced down town that Madame Somebody is taken sick, it ought not to be announced up town that the unlucky member of the troupe is Signor MORELLI. It would be better to announce, always, that the ailing artist is Signor N. N., that nameless person who so frequently plays a much less important part on the stage.

☞ We copy in another column a remarkable letter, written by JOHN C. CALHOUN in 1847, urging the importance of forcing the Slavery issue upon the Northern States at the earliest moment possible, and recommending a union of all the slaveholding States lying on the Atlantic and the Gulf, in refusing admission into their ports to all Northern vessels. Mr. CALHOUN insists that such a step would coerce the North into an abandonment of all opposition to Slavery and its extension, and the adoption of active and efficient measures to return their fugitive slaves.

The letter is important as showing the tendency and views of the leading champion of Slavery, in regard to the subject as one of contest between the free and the slaveholding States. His plan was not adopted by the South, and probably never will be, for the simple reason that as a remedy it would be utterly and absurdly futile, while the chief injury it would inflict would be upon the Southern States themselves.

☞ We see it stated that the BAISOS Committee starts again to-day in search of Mr. MATSELL's birth-place, that black trunk, the pall used at Mr. CLAY's funeral, and the dog-pound. It strikes us that this whole investigation is getting to be as great a nuisance as the Chairman of the Committee. The farce was amusing enough for the first act or two, but it is decidedly too long. We suggest to the Board of Aldermen that they put a stop to it. They have procured from the Courts a decision as to their power to compel testimony, which may be of very essential service to them hereafter. But the tomfoolery to which Alderman BAISOS is devoting himself is too ridiculous to be countenanced any longer by the Common Council. We respectfully suggest that the Alderman's smelling Committee be forthwith abolished.

☞ The Connecticut House of Representatives yesterday elected, on its part, four Judges of the Superior Court—two Democrats and two Know-Nothings. Two of those reported as regular Know-Nothing candidates were defeated.

Musical.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—"Belisario" was not given last evening. Some squabble among the artistes prevented its performance, and Signor ROSATTI has yet to make his début.

To-morrow evening "Don Giovanni" will be given, positively, Mme. SEIDENEDER supplies the place of Mme. FERRARI, who was indisposed.

GERMAN OPERA.—There was no performance last evening, in consequence of the Sangerfest. On Saturday "Masaniello" is to be produced.

TABERNACLE.—The black pianist's concert comes off to-night.

Odd Fellows.

Pursuant to a previous call, a meeting was held in Cincinnati on Saturday last to appoint delegates to the State Convention at Columbus on the 12th of July next. About two hundred persons were in attendance. To harmonize conflicting views a private caucus of the leaders of each of the sections (the Anti-Nebraska and Temperance men and the American Republicans,) was held on Friday night, and articles of partnership were agreed upon. The Chairman appointed a Committee who reported the following as the delegates the Committee agreed upon to attend the State Convention, and remarked that they were untrammeled by any pledges, and committed only to an unequivocal opposition to the Nebraska Humbug:

[The names of the delegates given below in italics are BENNETHONOS men—the others are fast friends of CHASE. This classification is pretty reliable and shows that in the Committee Room the ultra Free Soilers gained a decided advantage, having nineteen delegates to thirteen of their opponents.]

Peter Mitchell,	Edward Stone,	M. C. Van Pelt,
D. P. Phelps,	Wm. Lawrence,	John Graves,
J. P. Comstock,	R. Harwood,	A. H. Ryan,
J. P. Cox,	A. Moor,	Col. Wm. Schauer,
J. Webb,	A. P. Harrison,	W. K. Brown,
Wm. M. Gee,	Col. J. Wilkinson,	J. H. Fulle,
Jos. Gwynne,	George Corlett,	C. F. Schmidt,
J. M. Gilchrist,	Edwin Stimson,	John Cable,
R. B. Fuller,	Wm. Reeon,	Isaac J. Allen,
Ira Pickett,	A. H. Ryan,	John W. Herron,
	H. W. Thomas.

The report of the Committee was adopted by an overwhelming majority, and the meeting, according to the Cincinnati Commercial, separated after a grand fusion of yells.

Getting Out of Towns.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I much approve of the article in this day's TIMES, headed "Send them out of town;" but the difficulty is how to do so. Thousands would be willing to go out of town if they but knew where to go in order to better their situation. No doubt, there are many, plenty of places throughout this vast and prolific country that would absorb all the unemployed labor in the country. Hundreds of towns and localities are much in need of different classes of artisans and mechanics to enable them to carry out the various proposed improvements. Millions of acres of rich land display their treasures as samples of their producing capacities. A short time ago I read in one of our daily papers an account of a man out West sending his watch to some distant city to be repaired, and getting it returned, all expenses being but a part of what the only watchmaker in his town asked him, showing that lack of labor is the parent of monopoly. It occurred to me some time ago that it was in the power of any and every trade to regulate itself and distribute its various workers throughout the country, according to the country's needs, by soliciting statistical information, by the means of a corresponding gateway, through other and similarly-applied organizations, as to the wants and capacities of communities—of the producers—the business of the inhabitants—of the various localities—of their accommodations—the number of manufactories, trades and workers in their particular business, and average number to population. By this means they would be enabled to assist their fellows to localities where the want of laborers had expanded monopoly, and thus limited consumption, or to leave localities where the excess of labor prevented fair wages. Would not this hint suit the Commissioner of Emigration? They could get their information from municipal officers. YOURS, &c., SUMMERHAGEN.

THE BEST EVIDENCE THAT CAN BE ADDUCED in favor of the celebrated HOOP LAND'S GERMAN BITTERS, prepared by Dr. C. M. JACKSON, is the unbiased demand for them from all parts of the Union, and the testimonials which have long in the hands of the proprietor, and which he constantly receives, are the best evidence that the Bitters are what they are represented to be, namely, a safe and pleasant medicine, for the cure of those diseases for which they are recommended, and which, from the nature of the disease, it would be impossible to have recourse to the professional men, who, sufficiently convinced that a large portion of the sick are almost desperate in their search after relief, and that they have, and will continue to, resort to the quackeries and nostrums of the day. Depot, 120 Fulton-st., and dealers everywhere.

A Correction.

In your paper of the 20th inst. appeared an interesting communication on the University of Virginia.

The writer has, however, fallen into one error, which, with your leave, I would correct. He states that the Chair of Mathematics is vacant, being temporarily filled by Mr. NELSON; and adds, that "it was left vacant some months since by the death of the lamented Professor COURTENAY, formerly of West Point." Now, this Professorship was filled last Summer by the election of Mr. ALBERT TAYLOR BLENSOE, then of the University of Mississippi, who entered upon his duties in the Autumn following.

Professor BLENSOE is not only an ornament to the Chair he occupies at the University, but has also distinguished himself as one of the first Metaphysical writers of our country.

I regret that so important an omission should have been made by your intelligent correspondent. A.

Return of Fugitives.

From the New-Orleans Picayune.

An English ship which left this port last week for Liverpool, discovered a couple of runaway slaves stowed away on board, just after the tow-boat had left her outside of the Balize. The Captain immediately hoisted a signal, and the tow-boat returned, took the negroes on board, and brought them up to the city. One of them, who belongs to Mr. PARKER, stated that the cook and steward of the vessel, both negroes, had induced them to run away, and had concealed them in a house on deck, behind some cotton. The steward told the boy that he had several years since been a slave in this city, and had succeeded in making his escape to Canada, where he had remained for some time and then went to England. He there procured some forged free papers, and had made several voyages to this city. He did not say, however, whether he had ever succeeded in running off any negroes. The place in which the negroes were concealed was so close and hot that they could not remain any longer without danger of stifling. When they came out, the steward cursed them for a pair of fools, and said he hoped they would spend the balance of their lives in a dungeon.

A FUGITIVE.—On Wednesday morning when the freight train arrived at the depôt here, there was found on one of the cars laden with shelled corn, an old negro man, who, by some means or other had contrived to get in the car after it was loaded at Michigan city, which was on Saturday last, and remained there till it reached this place, being nearly three days without water or food, except corn. Every one knows the heating qualities of corn when it is shut up close for a day or two, so they can imagine the condition of this fugitive when the door was unlocked, and he undertook to step out.

"Hillo!" says the Conductor, "where are you from?"

"From Kentucky, Massa."

"How did you find the traveling?"

"Oh, Massa, berry warm."

The poor fellow was perfectly reeking with perspiration. At this time up stepped one of the railroad men and says:

"You're the man I've got the papers for."

"Oh, Massa," said the old woolly head, "bress the Lord, I'se cool now. Don't send a poor nigger back. Dey'll skin um alive if dey catch um back dere."

Meanwhile he had got out of the car, and one of the men said to him, "Do you see that place over the river? Now you run for it and we will keep the men who so after you till you get a fair start." So the fugitive made tracks at a swinging gait up the dock, and caught the Tressel just as she was starting over with a drove of hogs, and the way he plunged into the drove over the railrail, Officer WHITMAN says, raised the most horrid squealing, rush on and off the decks that has been heard in this vicinity since the new runner law has gone into operation. The man that had the papers of course enjoyed the sport with the rest.—Detroit Democrat.

A KING IN RETIREMENT.—The London Times says: If any one wishes to know how Louis of Savoia is employed at present, we will tell him. ORLANDO V. of Spain, as all the world knows, went straight from his palace to a convent. Louis of Savoia entertains no such ascetic and unworldly notions of what becomes an ex-Monarch. He is, par excellence, an idle man. He has no cares to vex him. It matters not to him whether the allied forces succeed at Sebastopol or not. He can look with supreme indifference on the troubles that are shaking Europe. And so, the other day, this once Royal gentleman sat down to a dinner given in his honor by a body of artists, including our own GIBSON and WILLIAMS, at the Villa Albani, near Rome. How pleasant this must have been! How charming that a King should know himself so well as to descend, without a murmur, from a Royal station, and become, what nature intended him for, the friend and companion of artists!

NARROW ESCAPE OF MR. HISS.—We learn that Mr. JOSEPH HISS, late Representative of Boston, came near suffering serious injury, if not death, at the Ocean House, on Wednesday night. Mr. H. was in town preparatory to lecturing upon the doings of the Legislature, stopping at the Ocean House, and retired at night, leaving a spirit lamp burning with the wick well up. In the morning the room was full of smoke, and Mr. HISS himself the color of a coalman. He was awakened with extreme difficulty, but not until the condition of the room had caused the blood to settle about his eyes. One of the windows was slightly raised, or otherwise he would have died.—Newburyport Herald.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

DR. TOWNSEND'S SARSAPARILLA

is at this Season most invaluable as a Restorative and

PURIFIER OF THE BLOOD.

It not only creates new, rich and pure blood, but it will effectually carry off all putrid humors, cleanse the stomach, regulate the bowels, impart a tone and vigor to the whole system, and

KEEP THE BLOOD PURE.

One great recommendation for using this Sarsaparilla is that every bottle of it is manufactured under the direct supervision of the most talented Chemist and Physician in this country, and his certificate attached to each bottle guarantees that it is "PURELY VEGETABLE, AND WITHOUT MERCURY."

There has never yet been a medicine presented to the public which been so effectually contained its character for "PURIFYING THE BLOOD" as DR. TOWNSEND'S SARSAPARILLA" and the fact that it has entirely superseded all other preparations claiming the same properties, alone speaks volumes in its favor.

THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE.

Only purify the Blood, and disease must vanish.

Opium Eating in England—Reply to Mr. Buchanan, Esq.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I observe in Saturday's impression of your journal, over the signature of an anonymous writer of the Temperance advocates, some remarks intended to throw a doubt upon the historical accuracy of a statement which your had previously made, of an editorial article respecting the increased use of opium, which you stated had followed close on the heels of the Temperance movement of 1830 in England.

As the fact is one having an important bearing upon the wisdom and utility of excessive numerous in aid of opinions for social reformation, I beg the favor of the publication of the following testimony supporting the point at issue:

From the Annual Register for the month of Nov. 1830.

"OPIUM EATING IN ENGLAND.—The increased consumption of opium was the subject of discussion at a meeting of the Westminster Medical Society, this day. Dr. J. Johnson stated, from his own personal knowledge, that opium eating had increased in this country to such an extent as to have become nearly equal in its proportion with intoxication. Indeed, the subject had called forth the particular attention of the different insurance offices, who were about to hold a meeting in consequence of their having discovered that they had sustained considerable loss from, as well as that a new risk had been created by, the enormous increase of the consumption of opium. In future policies, of course, the risk could be provided for by the charge of an additional premium; but as such a course of chance had not been anticipated in policies already effected, the matter had assumed somewhat serious aspect. Several gentlemen have attributed to the fatal results to which the question invariably led."

From Harriet Martineau's History of England, Vol. 3, 44th.

"While the Temperance cause seemed to be advancing everywhere, and tea-drinkings, with speeches, and dances with music and lemonade, were noticed in newspapers almost from day to day, certain disclosures were made at a meeting of the Westminster Medical Society, in 1830, which appalled the few who heard or attended to the information. The increase of the consumption of opium in England had led to inquiry. It was found that the abjuration of intoxicating drinks was little more than a set-off against the increased consumption of opium. The insurance offices were consulting how to defend their interests under this new peril to human life. They could guard against liability from opium eating in future policies of insurance; but they found their capital in danger from the intemperance of persons already insured. It was not only nor chiefly in the insuring class of society that the practice existed. It spread far were fearfully among the hungry. In the large manufacturing towns the druggists now employed their spare minutes throughout the week in making up penny or two penny packets of opium for sale on Saturdays, when hundreds of poor creatures would come to receive from the long pole on the counter the packet which was to give them stupor till the miserable Monday morning."

Statements to the same effect as the above were, as your correspondent remarks also, very extensively made in 1839 in the English journals, but it is due to historical truth and to your correspondent to add that the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, of which Lord Brougham was then Chairman, put forth in 1840 their Penny Cyclopedia, in which they say that although the eating of opium prevailed extensively in Lincolnshire as a remedy for ague, and that the giving laudanum to children was a crying evil, yet that the alleged increase of opium eating among tee-totallers did not rest upon any good evidence.

In this conflict of evidence it is fair to conclude that this alleged fact which has found its way into history could not have been entirely without foundation.

Permit me to add if such were the fact, it was a just retribution to the British nation for their shameful conduct,—conduct at which every honest Englishman must blush—in the opium war with China.

Perhaps, Mr. Editor, when the foresight and wisdom of our Temperance advocates shall equal the unquestionable purity of their intentions, the true solution of the social problem of sobriety will be found in the universal cultivation of the grape, in the manufacture of light and cheap wines, and their habitual and general use by all classes of society.

MONDAY MORNING, June 25, 1855.

MARKET REPORTS.

Telegraphic ... Correctly reported for this N. Y. Daily Times.

THURSDAY, June 26—6 P. M.

ASHES—Are less freely offered, and as they are in great request, holders now generally ask $6 37½@6 56 for Pearls, and $6 25 for Pots, ⅌ 100 lbs.; but these quotations are nominal.

BEE-WAX—A parcel of 1,600 lbs. American Yellow found buyers at 31c. ⅌ lb.

CANDLES—Rule pretty active and firm. There is not a moderate supply offering.

COFFEE—Rio is plentiful and is less inquired for; Little boys have been sold since our last, at 9@9½c. ⅌ lb. The transactions in other descriptions are quite limited in extent and figures.

COPPER—The demand is not brisk, but there is no great eagerness to sell, and prices are without variation.

COTTON—A very limited business has been transacted in this line, to-day, at nominally the same quotations as those referred to in our last. The sales for the week ending to-day are said to have been confined to 7,000 bales. The inquiry is quite scarce, but owners are not willing to make any further reduction in value, and this prevents an active trade. Until somewhat later in the season, when a fair supply shall have been received, it is not expected that any considerable movements will take place.

FEATHERS—We heard that 5,000 lbs. Live Geese were sold, but no price was mentioned.

FLOUR AND MEAL—State and Western brands are still on the decline, accompanied by increasing receipts and a corresponding heavy, yet only one to any moderate extent, The low grades suffer most from the decline in extent, but the distinction and lost ones are attributed to all descriptions. The day's sales amount to 12,000 barrels, within our revised range:

Superfine State	8 25 @ 8 37½
Fancy do.	8 37½@ 8 50
Extra State	8 00@ 8 12½
Superfine Western	8 00@ 8 37½
Extra Western and Indiana and Michigan	8 12½@ 8 75
Fancy do. do. do.	8 80 @ 9 00
Common to Good Ohio	8 00@ 8 37½
Fancy do.	8 25 @ 8 50
Extra do.	8 50 @ 9 75
Extra Indiana and Michigan	8 50 @10 25
Fancy do.	9 25 @ 9 75
Extra Genesee	11 00 @12 50

Included in the sales were 2,000 bbls. Common State, deliverable in all July, at $8 50. Besides what we have reported as sales, we understand some contracts were made at $8 25, for common State, ⅌ bbl., and others by the delivery and receipt of the flour, the transactions in this way constituted about 3,000 bbls. Canadian is sparingly sought after, and to with no change in value. 1,300 bbls. common to extra were disposed of at $8 00@8 12½ ⅌ bbl. Southern continues inactive and depressed, with sales of 1,300 bbls. at from $10@$12 for fancy to super, ⅌ bbl. Rye Flour has not sold much. There were 200 bbls. bought at $7 75@$8 75 for fine and superfine, ⅌ bbl. There have also been 200 bbls. Jersey Corn Meal purchased at $4 87½@5 ⅌ bbl.

GRAIN—Wheat is quiet and lingering. There is but much of a prime quality offering, but there prevails only limited inquiry, and the sales from millers, whose purchases are governed by their most urgent wants. A few parcels of Michigan white were taken at $2 50@$2 55 ⅌ bushel. Rye is dull and drooping. There is little or none, while the article is not in demand. 1,500 bushels have been procured, at 1 [illegible] ⅌ bushel. Barley is unchanged. Corn in Oats was in fair request, but firm. Corn is more freely offered, but prices are unchanged. 104,000 bushels, chiefly Western, were taken by the inspector at strictly prime, ⅌ bushel. The stock was not quite so large, and the position to pay more than 81 for prime is not realized, while many buyers thought it enough to offer for this description.

Buckwheat, Canadian and Lake River were sold at our last quotations.

HEMP—Remains inactive but firm. Some activity is looked for in a month or so; but sooner, not much business is apt to be transacted. Stocks are moderate, and prices are quite well supported, particularly for domestic.

HOPS—We heard that 100 bales last year's crop were sold at 30c. ⅌ lb.—the latter an extreme rate, though some owners claim even more. The supply has been more liberal, and in view of the prevailing pretty severe inquiry, but few are anticipating a further advancement in price, which makes them quite reserved.

MOLASSES—The importers in Sugar House are last week 400 hogs. at 40c. ⅌ gal. cash, and $39@031. cash credit, 9 mos. Muscovado Grade, but very firm. Other sorts are still unchanged.

LATER—Receipts are tolerably free buyers, at 31 @ 32c. They are not so abundant, though the stock is still quite ample.

LEAD—A small lot of Spanish was sold at $6 12½ ⅌ 100 lbs.

LIME—Rockland is in demand, and in stocks, at 85c. per common and $1 15 for hump, ⅌ bbl. The supply is [illegible]

LICORICE PASTE—300 boxes Licorice Paste were sold at 16c. cash ⅌ lb.

MOLASSES—There were 200 bbls. New-Orleans disposed of, at 30c. cash. ⅌ gallon.

NAVAL STORES—Crude Turpentine is dull and drooping, being now in very slack demand, though quotable at $3 75@$3, nearly at $3 87½@3. ⅌ 280 lbs. Spirits Turpentine is not so freely dealt in, but is still quoted at 40c. cash. ⅌ gallon. Shipping Tar is more sought after, and brings from $2@2 25 ⅌ bbl. Common Rosin is in fair request, and is firm, nearly at $1 62½@1 87½ ⅌ 310 lbs. delivered.

OILS—Whale and Sperm Oils are unchanged. 100 baskets Olive Oil were sold at $3 37½@3 50, each. Linseed is selling in a small way at 80c. cash. ⅌ gallon. Whale, per [illegible] ⅌ gallon. Lard Oil has been varied.

PROVISIONS—Pork is even brisker and firmer, with sales for the day of 2,600 bbls. at $19 50 for new mess, $16 12½@16 37½ for new prime; and $19 87½@19. mainly $19 for old mess, ⅌ bbl. Of the sales there were 500 bbls. mess, deliverable within 30 days, buyers option, at $20 ⅌ bbl. Cut Meats are in good demand at old figures; 200 pkgs. changed hands at 8½@10½c. for Hams, and 7(@7½c. for Shoulders, ⅌ lb. Lard is still improving—sales having been made to-day of 400 bbls. and kegs. fair to prime, at 10½@10½c. ⅌ lb. Beef is salable and firm; 400 bbls. were disposed of during the day at $9 00@$10 for Prime; $10 75@$12 75 for Country Mess; $13 50@$16 for repacked Mess; and $16 50@$17 for extra do., ⅌ bbl. Prime Mess Beef is dull and heavy within a range of from $20@$26 ⅌ bbl. Beef Hams are quiet and nominal from $18@$19 50 ⅌ bbl. Butter is obtained at 15c.@19c. for Ohio; 16c.@20c. for ordinary to good State, and 20c.@22c. for choice do., ⅌ lb. Cheese is worth but from 5c.@6c. ⅌ lb.

RICE—Sales have been made of 200 trcs. Carolina at $5 75@5 87½; and an invoice of London dressed East India on terms not disclosed.

SALT—The demand is not so brisk, but prices are supported.

SEEDS—The market here is generally quiet, and otherwise unchanged.

SOAP—There were 100 boxes Castile sold at former figures.

SPICES—Been less active, but not less firm.

SUGARS—Have not varied much. About 450 hhds. Cuba found purchasers at 5½@6½c. ⅌ lb. Other small lots were reported as having been sold at previous rates.

TALLOW—Sales to 10,000 lbs. prime were taken at old quotations.

TOBACCO—The demand is moderate, prices without change. The sales since Friday have included: 63 hhds. Kentucky, at 8½@12½c.; 311 portaccos Havana at 20c.@32c., and 140 cases. Seed Leaf at 7½@10½c.

WHISKY—Sales of 200 bbls. Ohio and Prison have been effected at 26c.@28c. ⅌ gallon.

FREIGHTS—The business to-day was moderate at unaltered rates. Ship owners were asking too much on Corn for Liverpool, and thereby checked the export movement in this article. Some engagements of Cotton for the same port were reported at 3-16d. ⅌ lb. For London, a small quantity of measurement goods has been taken at 50c.@55c. ⅌ ton. For Havre, the latest engagement was a cargo of Palm Leaf at $1,600, for the whole. For other ports, we heard of nothing particularly new.

THE UNITED STATES MECHANICAL STREET CLEANING COMPANY—Are now prepared to contract with corporations, contractors, turnpike or plank road companies, for cleaning the streets and highways of every description by the year, month, or mile, in any part of the United States. The system of scavenging adopted by this Company, together with their sweeping and cleaning apparatus, has received the highest commendations from the press and authorities of every city where they have operated—the merits of the machines being not only valuable as efficient street cleansers, but as preservatives of the street surfaces, particularly so on cobble-stone pavements and macadamized roads. In this respect they receive the testimony of every civil engineer who witnesses their construction and mode of operation. In cities and large towns they simplify the whole system of cleaning, enabling the authorities to have any street or streets cleaned in a thorough manner in a few hours. For particulars address SMITH, BOERLE & CO., No. 308 Broadway, New-York, No. 110 South Front-st. Philadelphia.

UNITED STATES RAILROAD CAR-BRAKE COMPANY—No. 42 Beaver-st., New-York.—President, GOUVERNEUR MORRIS; Secretary and Treasurer, NORMAN S. WASHBURN; General Agent, WILLIAM S. GRAMES. Directors—GOUVERNEUR MORRIS, HENRY SHELDON, JOHN M. HOPKINS, WILLIAM NORRIS, WILLIAM G. GRAMES.

We now offer to Railroad Companies the cheapest, simplest and most efficient method of stopping the engines of a locomotive by a single stroke of a crank, and one that has never been made. We have in our office a full sized model, showing the operation of this invention perfectly to view. We ask the attention of all persons interested in Railroads, to an examination of its advantages, and of giving the inventor the power to apply the brakes upon it to any thing is hardly a railroad accident occurs but that the adoption of this or some other equally efficient method would totally prevent or greatly mitigate. Its immediate adoption is demanded as well by the interests of the company as the safety of persons and property conveyed by Railroads. We offer every facility to Companies desirous of testing for themselves the advantages of this method. For circulars and other information apply at the office of the Company. W. S. GRAMES, General Agent.

OBITUARY.—Died, Wednesday, May 24, at the residence of his father, at Pelham Priory, SAMUEL LOUDEN, Esq., Attorney and Counselor-at-Law, aged 32. Mr. Louden was the son of Henry Louden, Esq., formerly the law partner of Abraham Van Vechten, Esq., in Albany. After receiving a highly finished and classic education, and being licensed in the legal profession, in 1849, he went to the City of New-York, full of hope and promise, and became connected with Messrs. Hunt & Ogden, No. 11 Wall-st., in the practice of law. After some three years of arduous and the confined application to business, his health began to fail, under that most insidious and fatiest of all diseases, consumption. When no longer able to attend to the duties of the office, he returned home, where during his protracted illness of about two years, he received every attention that care which fond and doting parents and friends could bestow, till he yielded up his spirit to his God.
